Concerns voiced over new Stark Co. school Board says it is watching budget

By JOHN A. BALLENTINE

For The Prairie News WYOMING – Four Stark County residents voiced concerns about a school renovation project during the public comment portion of Monday's meeting of the Stark County Board of Education.

The speakers told board members that the school renovation project should be put on hold, asked them to reconsider building a new school and expressed concerns about higher tax rates.

Local farmer Doug Milby said in his statements that he "didn't attend some of the other information meetings" because "I was gone, I wasn't here."

Milby, in addressing the board, said, "I feel that this is the poorest time to ever think of starting a new school."

Milby said the cost of materials "is skyrocketing" and said he believes the board should "drag their feet" on this project at this point in time.

Milby also asked that if Stark County's tax rate increases, will Bradford students choose Bureau Valley High School as the school to attend instead of Stark County High School?

Milby closed out his statements by saying, "I never got a chance to vote on this building" and said that his "rights were tromped on."

Keith Webster said, "I've been frustrated watching this process come out."

Webster said his frustration is based upon "what little say I Continued on Page 2

Wonder weed chicory deserves more respect

By GRETCHEN STEELE

For The Weekly Post

Chicory really is a wonder weed. Poor old chicory just doesn't get the respect it deserves!

Across Illinois, chicory is bursting forth along the roadsides, scattered out in fields and often in what seems like the most inhospitable places. Chicory likes disturbed, crappy ground. Heck, chicory blossoms are not fans of the scalding sun, blossoms may close up some, only to fully reopen the following day.

But chicory is so much more than just a common roadside weed - it's an excellent edible that has several uses. I must caution about harvesting chicory from heavily traveled roadsides or ditch lines that look like they may have been sprayed or had overspray from adjacent fields. Be picky about where you harvest so you don't end up with chemically contaminated plants. All parts of the chicory plant can be consumed: leaves, flowers, flower buds and roots. Chicory is probably best known for its use as a coffee additive or substitute. Many people have been enthralled by "New Orleans Style" coffee, a mixture of chicory and regular coffee, and sometimes a few shakes of spices and a little cream.

During the Civil War, when the Union Navy cut off the port of New Orleans one of the largest coffee importation sites – chicory became a necessary sub stitute for coffee. People also turned to chicory as a coffee substitute during the Depression and when coffee was rationed during World War II.

I've seen it pop up in the cracks of sidewalks and parking lots.

The prolific blue weed provides a lovely view on your morning commute. Often there will be vast swaths of delicate pale blue blooms in the early morning. As the day progresses, since

SCHOOL: New cost estimate is $16,535,000

Continued from Page 1 feel that I've had." He noted that part of the blame is his own because he did not attend earlier meetings.

Webster said frustration also stems from the original estimated cost of $15 million now being estimated at over $16 million.

"Where are we going to stop?" he asked. Jim Castagna, local Stark County farmer, said he believes many people were not aware of a new school building being built and that it won't be safer than the existing school building. In regards to hopes the new building might boost attendance, Castagna said that other school districts have built new school buildings and have not "increased their numbers."

"I'm afraid you're thinking that a new building is going to solve your problems and I think you are going to give the taxpayers a lot of burden," Castagna said.

In response, Board President Ann Orwig discussed a summary of the timeline leading up to the new school building as far as meetings that were held.

"We found that there was a significant cost to put a Band-Aid on that [existing] building and that's when we began looking at a renovation project," Orwig said.

Orwig suggested that the cost of repairing the existing school building would be a temporary solution to an ongoing problem.

"In the fall of 2019 the Farnsworth Group presented those plans – we had a lot of community members who were in attendance, those plans were highlighted in the local media and they were highlighted on our Facebook page," Orwig said.

Orwig said that a special meeting was held in February of 2020 where the public was invited to attend, and taxpayers were given an opportunity to know what impact the project would have on their property taxes. At the Feb. 24, 2020, regular board meeting Orwig said, "Everyone, except one person, spoke highly in favor of the project."

Orwig also said the board is aware of the escalating costs and that they are keeping an eye on the budget and not merely signing "a blank check." She said public input has been sought out with input opportunities present at past meetings.

Orwig also said the board would not drag their feet when it comes to safety of students, because that would be "irresponsible."

She closed by saying, "I work for the taxpayers, but I also work for the kids in this district."

The Farnsworth Group and CORE Construction representatives provided an update on the school building renovation project and said the total cost is currently $16,535,000.

As far as a tentative timeline, construction is to start Aug. 17 with a completion date of Aug. 1, 2022. The overall project completion date is Dec. 23, 2022.

A new gymnasium has been removed from the plans, due to additional costs projected.

In other agenda business, the board approved bids for milk from Prairie Farms, trash pickup from Area Disposal and printing of the Rebel Reporter by Lampe Publications. No bids were received for bread products, so the school district will use a food cooperative.

After closed session, the board:

• Hired Desiree Gentry as custodian, Jacob Siekmann as elementary physical education teacher and Clint Terwilliger as assistant football coach;

• Accepted the resignations of Sarah Stieghorst as sophomore class sponsor and Logan Thake as elementary physical education teacher.

GUEST VOICES

Worker wages not cause of higher food prices

After my first year at the Big U, I returned to the southern Illinois dairy farm of my youth for a summer of work. The first task, however, was to ask my father to double my hourly pay from 50-cents an hour, the amount I'd been paid through high school, to $1 per hour.

"Well," Dad said calmly, "a dollar an hour is a man's wage and I don't see a man don't see a man standing in front of me." Discussion over.

Federal minimum wage that year was $2 an hour but no "hired man" – or, evidently, "hired boy" – ever received that wage from my father.

I didn't make the same mistake the following summer. After a month home at, again, 50-cents an hour, I returned to the university to work at its dairy research farms for the fantastic wage of $2.10 an hour.

And my father? He encouraged it because hired men (and even hired sons) back then were both plentiful and cheap. He also had the law on his side; farmworkers were exempt from federal wage requirements.

Little has changed since. According to a recent U.S. Department of Labor National Agricultural Workers Survey, the "average total income of farm workers is between $15,000 to $17,499 a year for individuals and $20,000 to $24,999 for a family."

That means, notes the survey, that

"... 25 percent of all farm workers had a family income below the federal poverty line."

This less-than-a-living wage reality for most farm and food workers points to another central truth in U.S. agriculture: worker wages are not the central component of increased food costs despite Big Ag's constant whining that they are.

For example, in early June the fast casual restaurant chain Chipotle announced it was raising menu prices 4 percent, or about 35 cents per order, to pay for the company's raising average worker wages from $13 to $15 per hour.

Two months earlier, Chipotle acknowledged that its CEO, Brian Niccol, had earned $38 million in 2020, or 31 times his $1.2 million base salary.

BusinessInsider.com did the math on Niccol's pay; it "was 2,898 times more than the median Chipotle worker's $13,127 salary in 2020 working 25 hours a week in Illinois."

Moreover, it continues, "A study from California State University San Bernardino found that for a minimum wage increase of 10 percent, food prices increased by just 0.36 percent" – or a fraction of the price hike Chipotle instituted because of "higher worker wages."

The company is simply pocketing the lion's share of the price increase as profit and blaming it on higher worker pay. Baloney.

If we're talking baloney, cue Big Meat.

Once again meatpackers are bel-lowing about how they must have less government oversight and more labor leeway to survive today's pandemic-squeezed market.

In April, a federal judge told JBS USA, the global meatpacking giant, that it must slow kill floor line speeds at its Ottumwa, Iowa, hog killing plant back to 1,106 hogs per hour. JBS had recently raised line speeds under a U.S. Department of Agriculture October 2019 rule change. That rule, however, was contested in federal court.

More remarkable than the order to return kill speeds to just 1,106 hogs per hour, is how many federal politicians, led by Iowa's Sen. Charles Grassley, rallied to restore unlimited kill speeds because, as reported by DTN, Grassely claimed "slower line speeds could lead to a $23 per head decline in hog prices."

Even if true – Grassely cited an Iowa State University source for the number – not even a nickel of the money would flow to most hog farmers since about 85 percent of all U.S. hogs are raised under contract for (wait for it, yes) meatpackers.

As such, most, if not all, of any extra profit made through faster, more dangerous kill speeds would flow to the packers, not the hog farmers or plant workers.

But that's the way it's been since, well, too long.

Legislators pass Gov. Pritzker 660+ bills

By JERRY NOWICKI Capitol News Illinois

SPRINGFIELD – With the first year of the 102nd General Assembly mostly wrapped up, lawmakers as of last Friday had officially passed 664 bills through both houses for eventual consideration by the governor.

Gov. JB Pritzker had signed 17 of them as of Friday, including last Thursday's signing of the state's operating budget and a bill making several changes to the state election code.

Charlie Wheeler, an emeritus professor at the University of Illinois Springfield who covered the Illinois General Assembly for the Chicago Sun-Times for more than two decades, said he was struck by the "progressive nature" of the bills passed by the General Assembly this year.

"The voting legislation, for example, you look at what other states are doing and then you look at what we did, that was kind of an example" of the strongly Democratic legislation that passed this year, Wheeler said.

That elections law, which took effect immediately upon the governor's signature, instructs election authorities to create a permanent voteby-mail list which voters may choose to join. It also makes Election Day 2022 a state holiday and requires election authorities to create a central voting site where all residents within the authority's jurisdiction can cast a ballot on Election Day 2022.

It also allows political candidates to use campaign funds for child care and care for other dependents, and requires that any vacancy in the General Assembly be filled in an open meeting, rather than behind closed doors. It beefs up cybersecurity requirements as well.

It allows – but does not require – county jails to establish polling places to allow voting by inmates who are residents of the county and have not been convicted of the offense for which they are in custody. It also creates provisions for curbside voting during early voting and on Election Day.

Cover

Like next year's budget, the elections bill passed with support from only supermajority Democrats – a common theme for some of the more controversial legislation that has passed under Pritzker. Partisan bills included a 2019 minimum wage hike, placing an ill-fated graduated income tax on the 2020 ballot, criminal justice reforms that passed in January, and newly drawn legislative maps that will likely help Democrats maintain those supermajorities.

While there have been bipartisan victories as well, such as the budget and capital infrastructure plans passed during Pritzker's first year in office, legalization of adult-use marijuana, and expanding gambling, the partisan makeup of the General Assembly has allowed the governor to use his veto sparingly.

A supermajority is reached when a party has at least 71 votes in the House or 36 in the Senate, giving them the ability to override a governor's veto. Democrats have been over those numbers for the entirety of Pritzker's time in office.

Wheeler said it's common to see fewer vetoes in such a situation.

"They've been on pretty much the same page," Wheeler said, noting any disagreements are "nothing compared to some of the past animosity, for example, with Madigan and (former Democratic Gov. Rod) Blagojevich who sort of mutually detested each other."

Pritzker has used the veto just 11 times as governor.

In his first year, Pritzker vetoed just eight of the 599 bills passed in the regular session and one of the 38 bills passed in the veto session. The majority of those vetoes were proce-

In early 2020, he was nearly unanimously overridden on a veto of a bill creating tax breaks for aircraft parts.

Pritzker's second year was slower, with just 22 bills passing both houses in the regular session. Lawmakers then came back for a "lame duck" session in January 2021, passing 23 bills before the 101st General Assembly adjourned.

Pritzker vetoed one of those bills, a measure establishing pretrial interest on civil monetary awards.

In contrast, according to a Capitol News Illinois analysis of Illinois General Assembly website data, former Democratic Gov. Rod Blagojevich issued 133 vetoes in the 95th General Assembly of 2007 and 2008, the final one before his 2009 impeachment. In that two-year session, 87 of those vetoes became law either with the changes Blagojevich suggested or through overrides.

Things went better for Blagojevich's successor, Pat Quinn. Quinn, a Democrat with Democrats in control of the General Assembly, vetoed 41 bills in the 97th General Assembly, with 17 becoming law. In the 98th General Assembly, he vetoed 25 bills, 10 that became law.

Republican Gov. Bruce Rauner, meanwhile, issued 111 vetoes in the 99th General Assembly of 2015 and 2016, with only four overturned.

Rauner saw more Republican pushback in 2017 and 2018. He issued 142 vetoes in the 100th General Assembly, 51 of which became law. This week, Pritzker issued his first veto of the current General Assembly, a technical fix to drafting errors in the state budget. Lawmakers inadvertently left out effective dates in portions of the bill, and they accepted Pritzker's changes on partisan lines. He signed the bill Thursday with the changes.

Bradford's Snack Shack honored by Betas

By ANGIE STANGE For The Prairie News

BRADFORD – In honor of dedication and great service to the community, the Bradford Beta Sigma Phi honors Bradford's Snack Shack Ladies with the 2021 Women of the Year Award.

These dedicated business women have kept their snack and ice cream shop open throughout the COVID-19 shutdowns of 2020 and 2021 through their ingenuity and determination.

Melanie McCullough, with the help of her daughter, Jennifer Slichenmyer, Jennifer's two daughters, Emma and Allison, Taylour Birkett Cade and Tori Lomelino opened the "Bradford Snack Shack" at the end of July 2018. Since opening, McKenna Birkett, April Atkins, and Natalie Wall have joined the staff.

A stroll over to the park to enjoy their treats only added to the outing. Shack business thrived and added a new gathering spot in town until COVID restrictions and concerns. Not to be deterred, these enterprising ladies met the challenge.

When indoor serving was prohibited, staff made window service and curbside service available. They also made home deliveries in special situations. When the community looked for a place this past winter to have access to a meal during daytime hours, they accommodated by increasing their menu and by staying open throughout those months to serve the public's needs.

These Snack Shack Ladies willingly continue to help others in the community by collecting donations for various charitable causes that arise. They make personal sacrifices to provide the community, visitors, travelers, and workers in the area a place to have a great meal or snack.

the chicory plant that are roasted and then ground. In America, chicory has historically been used as a coffee substitute during difficult times.

Early settlers often grew chicory in their home gardens, and the escape from those gardens has resulted in the plant becoming naturalized across America.

Besides the edible root, chicory has other culinary uses. When cooking with chicory, harvest in the spring or fall since summer's heat makes them taste bitter. Young chicory leaves can be added to salads, flower buds can be pickled and blossoms added to salads. Mature leaves can be used as a cooked green. Be forewarned: chicory greens have a bit of a bitter bite.

The roots are what so many foragers prize and are most commonly harvest for the delicious drink made from roasted and ground roots or mixed with coffee. For those wishing to harvest the root and try their hand at making a chicory drink or chicory/coffee blend, it's best to harvest the root in the fall. At the end of summer, chicory stems are tall scraggly and dry. So mark the spot now when they are blooming to make it easier to find come a rainy early fall period. The reason for picking a rainy period to harvest is that chicory has long, deep taproots and can be a real bear to dig out of hard, dry soil. It's much easier if done when the soil is damp. You will likely also have to dig around the edges of the plant and then tug at it to get it freed from the ground.

Once you get home with your chicory roots, give them a good scrub like you would any root vegetable and then slice or coarsely chop. The roots can be tough and sometimes even a little woody in the centers.

I find it a little easier to use a vegetable peeler and peel off thin strips and then slice the tougher woodier centers if present. Either way works fine.

Dry the chicory in the oven at 200° F for an hour or an hour and a half. Once fully dry, turn the oven up to 300° F and roast until it turns a lovely golden brown and you can begin to smell the wonderful scent that comes from roasting chicory. Usually, that takes about 30 minutes. The finished product should be crispy and easily break in your fingers. Though hard to describe, it is almost worth roasting roots just to have the wonderful sort of spicy, sort of chocolatey, earthy fragrance fill your house.

blender. This step can involve some trial and error, depending on the type of coffee grinder you have. If I have a large batch, I find it easier to run through the blender on chop then a few whizzes on liquify to get the powder consistency I like.

You definitely will want to filter this versus just dumping it in a cup and pouring boiling water over it (unless you like a gritty drink). I use roughly 1.5 tablespoons of ground chicory per 1 cup of water – but that's just my personal choice.

You can also mix with your favorite coffee blend at a ratio of 1 part chicory to 3 parts coffee. By all means, experiment around with this delightful caffeine-free substitute. Try it with cream, a little sugar, honey, or even yummier – a dollop of molasses. Mix in a bit of cocoa powder – the variations are only limited

After your sliced/ chopped roots are sufficiently dried, roasted and cooled, put them through a coffee grinder or by your imagination!

As always when it comes to foraging, make sure that you have correctly identified the plant and only try a little of any wild food the first time.

Until it's time to dig those roots, enjoy the beauty that the lovely delicate pale blue flowers bring to our landscape, and dream of that beautiful aroma and taste of a warm cup of chicory brew.

Princeville's Heritage Days return

By JEFF LAMPE For The Weekly Post

PRINCEVILLE – While the beer tent is gone for another year, most activities that have made Heritage Days a popular event in Princeville are back this weekend after a one-year, pandemic-related hiatus.

Getting to this point was not always certain, though, according to Beth Duttlinger, president of the Princeville Civic Association, which organizes the festival.

"Some of this was like a wing and a prayer when we were doing the planning, because we weren't sure how much would be open," Duttlinger said. "So we're very fortunate the state is open and we can do the carnival."

The annual festival opens today at 5 p.m. with carnival rides and a food tent preceding a 6 p.m. concert by the Central Illinois Banjo Club at the Stevens Square Stage, to be followed at 7:30 p.m. by The Marriage Game.

Friday marks the official opening of the Art Show at Lillie M. Evans Library at 4:30 p.m., where Duttlinger expects up to 50 entries. Rides and the food tent start at 5, the Princeville High School football auction is at 5:30 on the stage and the talent show and vacation bible school performances start at 7. Among the talent show entries is skilled local pianist Daniel Herrmann.

Saturday starts with a Lions Club breakfast from 7-10 a.m. and the 5K run/walk at 8, with registration at 7 at Village Hall.

The parade is at 1 p.m. and will be led by grand marshalls Kerry and Ann Cordis.

Rides open after the parade along with children's activities, including a balloon artist, temporary tattoos and rock painting in Stevens Square.

New this year are water fights on the lot on the corner of Santa Fe and Spring streets that normally houses the Akron-Princeville Fire Department beer tent. All ages can participate in the water fights.

Bingo is open from 3-5 p.m. at the food tent and Chris Delbridge's band Hindsight performs from 6-8 p.m. on the stage.

Duttlinger said Sunday's Worship in the Park was cancelled because no church wanted to coordinate the service.

"We need people to get involved in the Princeville Civic Association," Duttlinger said. "We do some really great things for the community that support our businesses and associations, but we need help."

To volunteer, attend a PCA meeting July 13 at 5:30 p.m. at the library or visit princevillecivicassociation.blogspotcom.
