Old fashioned Christmas in Bradford

By ANGIE STANGE

For The Prairie News

BRADFORD - Organizers are ready for the 2021 Bradford Old Fashioned Christmas this Saturday, Dec. 4, from 4:30 to 7 p.m.

The Christmas lighting at Elsie Hodges Park will begin at 4 p.m. A new evergreen tree at the park will be dedicated in the memory of Teresa Carlton. Santa is scheduled to arrive at the park in time for the lighting and then he will be on his way to the Bradford Fire House to greet the children.

The Bradford Library will be open during the evening for Christmas crafts. Rudolph and the Grinch will be joining the festivities throughout the evening as well.

The Fire House will host various activities throughout the day. The annual Beta Senior Citizen Christmas dinner is at noon at the Fire House this year. The Fire House will also be a place for people to sign up for the adult and children raffles and vote for the Holiday Home of the Year and the Best Decorated Business.

Santa will be at the Fire House between 4:30-6:30 p.m. to greet children and hand out treats. Following Santa's visit, the Methodist church will present three different Christmas readings including the Christmas Nativity story between 6:30-7 p.m.

The Fire House will also serve as a dining location for people to bring carry outs from the Snack Shack during the Christmas Walk. The Snack Shack will also provide deliveries that evening. The Highlands will be available for dining in and reservations are required. My Place and Main Street Tap will also be open.

There will be a variety of activities available at the Baptist Church. Two of these are a Lil' Holiday Shopper Shoppe and decorating and filling Christmas stockings. The Lil' Continued on Page 2

In 2018, the Tigers made the playoffs for the first time under coach Ryan Pearson. His dad, Tom, as was his tradition from the coach's previous schools and playing days at Stark County, painted the Bryant Field end zones in Princeton Tiger school colors.

Tom Pearson was ready to paint the town blue and white for the 2019 playoffs, but had a near-fatal fall at work and was knocked out of commission. PHS staffers Steve

Stark Co. board OKs two voting districts

By JOHN A. BALLENTINE

For The Prairie News

TOULON – The Stark County Board of Supervisors on Nov. 30 approved a reapportionment resolution establishing two voting districts for county board members and an annual budget appropriation and tax levy ordinance for fiscal year 2021-22.

There was no discussion on the budget at the special meeting.

The reapportionment resolution is necessary every 10 years to reflect Stark County's latest10-year census information.

Of 10 scenarios proposed by Don Schmidt who provided the analysis, the one passed by the board changes the voting districts the least. The census, according to board chairman

Al Curry, is done by town-

"We split Toulon Township to have a portion of it in each district. We don't know how many people live in Wyoming in Toulon Township, and we don't know how many live in Toulon in Toulon Township. What he [Schmidt] did was take the town population of each town and did a percent of the total, divided that way, and we assumed that the final analysis of the populations were at a 1.98 percent variance," Curry said. "Heather [Hollis, County Clerk and Recorder] contacted the state and that [percentage variance] is permissible, so we're leaving [the districts] it like it is."

Stark County Salvation Army Kettle

We are thankful for the blessings that we have received in the county this year. And the good folks of Stark County do a great job of sharing those blessings. Last year we were able to help many people get gasoline to make it to work or the doctor. We also helped many who found themselves running out of food at the end of the month. We bought medicine for some. Paid on rent, electric and water for others. I know that you will want to do those same things again this year. So when you see a Kettle in Stark County put in your donation. Or you can make your checks to Stark County Salvation Army Kettle and send to Stark County Salvation Army, PO Box 636, Toulon, IL, 61483. If you know someone who needs help have them call Al Harmon at 309-286-4611.

Local businesses are encouraged to participate in the Shop Local campaign in which "Bradford Bucks' will be the Grand Prize in the adult raffle. All participating businesses will be listed on the back of the Bradford Bucks and the Bradford Bucks spent at the various businesses will be redeemable by the businesses at the Bradford Banking Center.

Kids raffle items will be three stockings: a giant 3- to 4-foot stocking, a large and a medium stocking, each stuffed with candy, snacks, games etc.

During Christmas Walk hours, there will be a Sip and Shop at Alli

Ann Boutique in the Senior Citizen Building and Betsy Dunehew will host an Open House at B Framed Photography, her new studio on North Peoria Street (old police station). She will be offering a free digital picture per family, ornament frame decorating, and snacks and drinks.

There will be other activities throughout the village for your enjoyment. The evening will culminate at 7:30 p.m. at the Leet Methodist Church with the announcements of the raffle winners, Holiday Home of the Year, and the Best Decorated Business, concluding with community Christmas carol singing.

amily remains his top priority PEARSON:

"I'm just excited to be doing it," said Pearson, who made a miraculous recovery from his fall. "It (was) just one day at time. There was quite awhile there (after the fall) I don't remember at all.

"I didn't think about (painting), until last year. I was just heartbroken along with the kids and everybody that they didn't have the football season. I think I might have been up to it then, but what do you do?"

After heavy rains over the weekend before Princeton's first Class 3A playoff game (a 47-14 win over Poplar Grove North Boone), the weather broke and Pearson made it to the field Tuesday to start his field makeover. He said it took about six hours to paint the south end zone, using the design for "Cincinnati Bengal" Tiger stripes that the two Steves used in

He then got a late start that Wednesday because of wetness on the grass, but expected to get the north end zone finished by day's end.

He joked that I should text the coach and ask if his dad knows how to spell "Tigers," in reference to the "Who's the Chefs" Snickers commercial.

Pearson said he just hoped there wasn't a repeat of tricks the weather played with heavy snow that fell on Halloween just before the playoff game, which had to be cleared off.

Pearson still has a desire to paint "Tigers" in at midfield and maybe a Tiger paw, but is still waiting to get permission from the coach.

"He cut me off again," Tom said with a laugh. "But, that's all right. He wants these kids to earn a little bit extra like the kids before. That's just Ryan. That's his choice. I offered and he said, 'We'll wait."

The Tiger coach is very appreciative of his dad's support and to have him back doing what he loves most. "Oh gosh, that means everything to still have my dad be a part of my life and our football program," Ryan Pearson said. "Family has always been his top priority and it truly upset him to miss my games and painting our end zones in 2019. He has painted the end zones ever since 1997 when I was playing in the playoffs my senior year. He really enjoys doing it and it has since become a tradition for my family."

Princeton (10-2) wound up winning one more home playoff game this fall in the second round (40-0 over Prairie Central) before falling in the quarterfinals to Elmhurst IC Catholic, 31-7.

A painter by trade, Pearson still has a "ton" of purple paint left over from his son's coaching days at Canton.

"I never count them all. I always tell him about 40 cans, to make him feel responsible," he said with a chuckle.

Health insurance explained

Curry added that the adopted scenario appeared to be most equal with the deviations of the populations.

Another agenda item dealt with health insurance coverage. Union president Gary Bent addressed the board concerning a new insurance package that is available. At the end of October, the county board approved a $70,000 expenditure for the Sheriff's Office union members' insurance benefit.

Basically, the $70,000 is for union members to purchase individual insurance coverage and is split equally among the union members.

"We had our union representatives tell us 'here's a company from the East Coast'... but we went across the street [to Leezer's Insurance Agency]," Bent said. "What we found out was the group insurance would be for the county [employees]. They explained to us was that it would be better to grab a county number [insurance policy] and include everybody on this ... insurance."

By doing so, a better rate could be realized.

'We looked at it both

LOCAL KNOWLEDGE, LOCAL PEOPLE

ways and we decided the best thing to do would be to go to a group insurance for the whole county," Bent said. "It does not cost the county one dime."

Now, all county employees can apply for this insurance package. Bent said having more employees in the plan will lower the rate for participants.

Finally, the board approved the Fiscal Year 2021-22 bills.

The smartest person in the room

GUEST VOICES

We all know a few people who think of themselves as the smartest person in the room. We also know a handful of people who actually are the smartest person in the room.

Neil Harl was the latter; he was the smartest person in the room wherever he went and everyone either already knew it or quickly discovered it. More importantly, Harl knew it, too, and he often used his fierce intellect and equally quick smile to dominate public debates and charm dinner guests.

Harl died Nov. 4 in Ames, Iowa, the home of Iowa State University (ISU) and his academic home since his freshman days there in 1951. His record is legendary: a bachelor's degree, two years of military service, one year as an ag editor, then a law degree, a Ph.D. in economics and, a full professorship and endowed chair at ISU by 1976.

During that remarkable rise, Harl also made himself into the most published, most sought-out ag attorney/ag economist in the nation. During his career he would publish 29 books and give more than 3,400 presentations in 43 states and 17 foreign nations.

And, of course, he kept an immaculate record of it all.

In 1981, as his national reputation was soaring, Harl did one of the most courageous things I've – his career, the accolades, and his impeccable reputation - on the line to predict that fast-expanding farm debt and the just-passed Reagan tax cuts would bring economic calamity to rural America.

It wasn't a guess; it was an act of conscience. In August of 1981, he would write a decade later in his book The Farm Debt Crisis of the 1980s, he had spent weeks studying the Reagan Administration's new tax cuts to update lecture notes. What he learned, though – when combined with the tight money policy of Paul Volker's Federal Reserve - troubled him.

He soon sounded the alarm through speeches, op/eds, and conversations with reporters. Harl supplied the facts, figures, and forecasts; the newspapers supplied the gongs.

His warnings, however, were met by scowls from ag bankers and rural politicians. All were certain that the 1970s' fat times would continue to roll under the White House's "supply side," free market

"What are you trying to do to our president?" he was asked by "a flying wedge of Republican stalwarts" at a 1981 banking conference in Des Moines, he later wrote.

"I assured the phalanx of critics," he explained "... that I was indeed a loyal Republican (and that) there was just one thing worse than borrowing money, and that was voting Democratic."

He stayed on message, however, and by 1984, everything Harl had said would happen had either happened or was happening. Ag banks were bleeding bad loans, many Farm Credit banks needed federal bailouts, and thousands of farmers and ranchers were either closing their barn doors for good or having lenders foreclose 'em. It was the biggest U.S. farm crack-up since the Great Depression.

Harl didn't waste his or rural America's time gloating; he went to work on ways to ease the debt that was crushing farmers and banks alike. His specialties, law and economics, gave him unique insights on how lenders and the government could work together to develop new strategies and assistance programs to work through mountains of farm debt while healing broken markets.

And, slowly – far too slowly for far too many – the laggards finally listened to what the farmboy professor was saying. Harl had been right all along and only later, decades after the calamity had passed, would he acknowledge that his critics had been wrong. Dead wrong, in fact.

But saying it didn't make him the smartest person in the room. It did, however, make him one of the most courageous and, sure, more than just immodest.

It made him, in fact, Neil Harl. © 2021 ag comm

an important, vexing problem: Abundant research shows that students from low- and modest-income brown, Black and white American households have, for decades, lagged far behind upper-income families in math achievement. As a result, American students overall score poorly in math and science against other developed nations. And even students from our best high schools often score less well than students from Finland, Hong Kong and major cities in China, such as Shanghai, which alone has about the population of California.

If the U.S. wants to remain the global "king of the hill" in wealth and technological achievement, we simply must increase overall math achievement of our students. It's a national security issue, literally.

Simply put: China seeks to replace us as the dominant technological power, and it is largely focusing on education to achieve its goal.

Upwardly mobile Chinese parents (and most Chinese parents see themselves as moving up, because of rapid economic growth) assiduously push their children to study hard and achieve in school. I use this illustration to support my point.

More than a decade ago, I arrived in Shanghai to become a visiting professor at one of its leading universities. The day after my flight to that bustling city of 28 million, I was walking down a leafy side street on a Saturday morning. I noticed small children in cute uniforms walking toward a low-slung building. The Monday following, I asked my host professor what was

"Oh, they were going to school. Our youngsters attend school until noon every Saturday." And, I would add, for one more hour of instruction each week day than in the U.S.

I mused to myself that if Chinese Continued on Page 5

NOWLAN: STEM required for economic development

Continued from Page 4 parents were told their children could not go to school on Saturday, there would be riots in the street. Conversely, if American parents were told their kids had to go to school on Saturday, I fear there would probably also be riots in the street.

Math and science achievement are central to economic development and the wealth generated by rapidly evolving digital and quantum technologies.

What can we do? My new RA Kyle Dennison recommends the following, which is buttressed by much research that he and I came across:

- Longer school year and day, from 174 or so days a year, to 190 or more, and increase instructional hours from 5 to $5\frac{1}{2}$ or 6, as in the nations that lead us significantly in math achievement;
- Year-round school, replacing the long summer break, which causes learning loss, with a number of shorter breaks throughout the year, and

• Increase in the quality of our teachers. The teaching profession is so highly valued in Finland that it is hard to get into their teachers' colleges (only 10 percent of applicants do); in the U.S., it is hard not to get into our schools of education. In the U.S., with exceptions, of course, the best and brightest do not pursue careers in teaching, for reasons of low pay, low respect and testing and regulatory overload.

None of these recommendations would count for much, however, until our parents and society set higher achievement expectations and goals for our youngsters, and provide the encouragement and discipline critical to student achievement.

Based on my six decades of observation of rural, small town as well as low-income urban settings, there has been a woeful cultural inattention to the importance of educational achievement. We must put classroom goals on the same lofty level of importance as crossing the Friday night football goal

Low-income families on our many welfare programs should be asked, in return for government supports, to improve their parenting skills and attention to their kids' school effort.

I appreciate that our society has been going through much the past year and more, with the pandemic. But, just as England slept for a decade while Hitler rearmed the Third Reich, America seems to be asleep while China and other dynamic Asian nations seek to race past us.

Short-eared owls arriving

Prime time for short-eared owls is winter in strip-mine grasslands

By GRETCHEN STEELE For The Prairie News

Short-eared owls are once again arriving to winter in the tall grass of reclaimed strip mines and prairies of Illinois. Depending on locality, short-eared owls are also called Marsh Owl, Grass Owl, Flat-Faced Owl and Bog Owl.

These relatively small, diurnal owls are best viewed at dawn and dusk as they soar over open grasslands looking for their favorite food, voles.

The short-eared owl is specially equipped to hunt and survive on the prairie. It survives in that grassy landscape by hunting from a hover and building a nest on the ground the only Illinois owl that nests on the ground.

Likely among the most numerous owl species before human settlement and agricultural practices began to destroy their habitat, short-eared owls are now an Illinois state-endangered species.

However, the rolling, open grassland and tall grass hills of reclaimed strip mines provide excellent habitat for them. Once located, it's not unusual to find small groups of short eared owls wintering across southern Illinois "strip pits" and central Illinois prairies and grasslands.

They are active for a short time each day, usually at dusk and dawn. Their fluttering, almost butterfly-like flight can identify them. Despite their seemingly small size, they display a sizeable graceful wingspan, and their flight pattern includes a butterfly-like wing movement combined with soaring and diving over the fields.

With good binoculars or a keen eye, one can also spot them "roosting" on fence posts, sturdy weeds, or simply sitting in the grass and open fields enjoying a meal.

Another indicator that Short-eared owls may be close by is the presence of the northern harrier or marsh hawk. Short-eared owls often roost with their counterpart, the northern harrier, also an Illinois endangered species.

Decent numbers of northern harriers can also be found in reclaimed strip mine areas, where it's not unusual to see both birds soaring over the fields together and even engaging in the occasional skirmish over prey.

It's often easy to view the owls from the roadway or the warmth of a vehicle. And the use of good binoculars or a spotting scope can provide you with many enjoyable viewing moments without the worry of straying onto closed refuge ground or disturbing a hunter. Staying in your vehicle also makes a very useful photo blind and is less disturbing to the endangered species.

Unfortunately, we have learned that short-eared owls that have been subjected to high traffic and disturbance by people often will not return to that particular roost and feeding site the following winter. They are pretty shy little birds that aren't comfortable with a large amount of disruption. Keep that in mind if you plan a trip to visit and view short-eared owls this winter.

For The Prairie News

Well, here it is, the beginning of December and we haven't had to contend with any significant snow or ice. I'm not complaining, although it wouldn't hurt our gardens to have some more moisture, in rain-drop form please, before the ground

Nevertheless, some snow and ice is inevitable and that means we'll be reaching for the shovel and the salt. When Mother Nature blesses us with just an inch or so of snow, we might be tempted to sprinkle de-icer on the walks and driveway to melt the snow away. However, it's much better for nearby shrubs and perennials, as well as the creeks and rivers downstream, to use a leaf blower, shovel or broom instead. Your concrete driveway and walks will be better off too.

The most common de-icer used by homeowners is rock salt, sodium chloride. While it's pretty good at melting away ice, it's also pretty good at corroding metal railings and breaking up concrete surfaces.

Using our skills to the

There are other chemical compounds, such as potassium chloride, magnesium chloride and calcium magnesium acetate, that lower the freezing point much more and thus are less damaging to porous surfaces.

All the chemicals I've mentioned are corrosive and damaging to the environment. How can you protect your plants and hardscapes and still keep from falling on your keister? The answer is to use these de-icers, but use them correctly.

Don't use de-icers to melt snow. Remove the snow and then apply deicer.

Use just enough to do the job. The University of Minnesota says that a 12-ounce coffee mug of de-icer is enough to do 1,000 square feet of walks and driveway.

Consider using sand, kitty litter or even sawdust to give you some grip.

To protect nearby shrubs and perennials, avoid shoveling salt-laden snow on them. If you live along a roadway on which de-icing compounds are used, consider wrapping those plants with burlap or frost cover.

When installing landscape plants near walks and drives, keep them at least three feet away to minimize salt damage.

Research plants that are salt tolerant. The University of Wisconsin has a good list in its publication A3877.

Climate scientists tell us in a few years snow and ice will be the least of our worries. Until then, keep that snow shovel handy.

Electrocution the subject of tragic genealogy story

By DON SCHMIDT

For The Prairie News

WYOMING – The June 8, 1932, issue of the Wyoming Post-Herald chronicles the tragic electrocution of William B. and Edna Mae Graves and the incredible attempts to revive them over a period of five hours

At 6 p.m. June 6, 1932, during a thunderstorm Mr. Graves approached the back door of his home on North Sixth Street and noticed that a radio antenna wire had come loose. He grasped the wire with the intent of throwing it out of the way. The bare wire had fallen across two electric service wires from the house to the barn. The muscles in his hand contracted immediately and he was unable to let go as he dropped to the ground.

Mrs. Graves saw his plight and immediately ran to his assistance. Mrs. Graves grasped either the wire or the body of her husband. The electrical current passed through her body, and she was prostrated.

Their 9-year-old daughter Betty ran to the front of the house screaming for help. Roy Shullaw raced to the rear of the Graves home and found Mr. and Mrs. Graves entangled in the wire, apparently lifeless. Sensing the situation, he ran to the barn and secured a rake, which he used to pull the wire away. He disentangled the bodies and shouted to his wife to summon all physicians, and then sent calls for Public Service Company employees.

Resuscitation attempts were started immediately. When more help arrived, two doors were removed from the inside of the house to serve as stretchers and, with the Public Service men also on the stretcher, the bodies were removed to the barn, without interruption of the resuscitation efforts.

Drs. Wyllys, McMackin and Wead were on the scene in record time, and heart stimulants were injected into the two bodies. Neighbors and others furnished about 20 hot-water bottles and the bodies were kept warm from 6 to 11 p.m. Mrs. E. E. Brown, former county nurse, instructed a number of ladies in the manner of massaging the bodies in order to start circulation of the blood.

When physicians deemed it probable that sparks of life might be returned to the bodies, it was ordered that calls be sent to Galva and Kewanee for pulmotors – devices for delivering oxygen to patients in respiratory distress. The Kewanee crew made the 21-mile run to Wyoming in 15 minutes.

The motors were kept in continuous operation until the bodies were pronounced lifeless. Artificial respiration was continued by a large force of workers with never a letup.

It was shortly after 11 p.m. that the artificial respiration work was ceased and the subjects were declared dead.

Wyoming's WYHI Center requires repairs

By JOHN A. BALLENTINE

For The Prairie News

WYOMING – Wyoming's WYHI Community Center has reached age 95 and is in need of repairs.

Since 2010, the building has served as a community center, thanks to the efforts of a group of former students and local residents who purchased the building that had once housed Wyoming High School and later the Stark County Junior High.

Now, the building requires roof repairs and other interior renovations to remain functional. The estimated cost s $50,000-plus and inflation is driving that cost upward daily.

Recently, the WYHI Center underwent a change of management comprised by a board of six directors who are attempting to make the center a functional building for events. If there is enough interest in restoration, the new management will begin fundraising events and invest money into a new roof.

Those interested are asked to contact president Jason Gibson at (309) 883-5750 or vice president Andy Porter at (309) 696-7930. For reservations, contact Roger King at (309) 213-5574.

Fundraisers are being planned. Some may include a spaghetti dinner, a pancake and sausage breakfast, silent auctions and Bingo. Also, reestablishing activities that used to be held in the Center is an objective. For instance, the group is interested in having a tumbling group and aerobics class back in the building.

The Community Center is presently utilized by the First Baptist Church Food Pantry that was started nearly 30 years ago by Lura Hamilton and others. The center is also used for adult volleyball games and indoor walking.

To donate, send correspondences to: WYHI Stark County Community Center, P.O. Box 24, Wyoming, IL,

The building was dedicated on Aug. 29, 1927, and 145 students filled the hallways and classrooms that Sep-

Later, Toulon-LaFayette's high school building remained Stark County's high school, while Wyoming's high school building became the Junior High School. It remained the Junior High School until 2006 when it was closed except for the "new" gymnasium and agriculture

SPORTS: Galva boys go 0-5 at Williamsfield tourney

Kieser and Unhold had 12 apiece against Putnam County, while Rewerts and Joey Herman tallied 8 each. Most nights, Stark County had six players in the scoring column.

The team finished third in the tournament, winning a tiebreaker with Putnam County and Elmwood.

Rewerts and Kieser were both named to the all-tournament team.

"But I can't stress enough how much of a team effort it was, especially on the defensive end of the floor," Browning said.

The Rebels play at Brimfield on Friday. The Indians have a new coach in former assistant Kevin Kreiter and went 2-1 at their Turkey Tournament, beating Tremont (60-53) and Midwest Central (69-50) before losing to Knoxville (51-39).

Galva Boys Basketball

Winning has been at a premium of late for Galva boys hoops. After going 0-9 last year during COVID-shortened season, the Wildcats are currently 0-6 including an 0-5 showing at the ROWVA-Williamsifeld Thanksgiving Tournament.

Guard Cayden Morse heads to the basket in the Galva boys basketball team's season opener against ROWVA-Williamsfield. Morse is one of two returning starters for Galva. Photo by Collin Fairfield.

"My overall expectations are low and our goal is just to grow and improve," Coach Josh Harris said. "This team is still working on improving and has a long way to go."

Guard Cayden Morse and forward/center Josh Dunner are the lone starters back for Galva. Top newcomers are freshman Talan Hill and sophomore Braxton Rylander, according to Harris.

"Our biggest weakness so far has been our transition defense," Harris said.

Galva's losses at Williamsfield were to R-W, West Central (37-25), United (68-26), Henry-Senachwine (69-44) and to tourney champion Port Byron Riverdale (110-34).

The Wildcats also dropped Tuesday's game at Midland, 70-20.

Galva Girls Basketball

The Lady Wildcats (3-4) won Tuesday at home, topping Midland 52-26. Prior to that, Galva dropped its Monday road game at Henry-Senachwine, 69-43.

At the R-W Ridgewood Tournament, Galva beat Orion (46-38) and lost to R-W (55-41), Monmouth Roseville (52-28) and United (43-38).

The other win came Nov. 23 over Bureau Valley, 45-25.

Stark Co. Girls Basketball

After taking nearly two weeks off following the Princeton Tournament, the Lady Rebels (1-3) opened a stretch of at home vs. Illini Bluffs on Thursday. Stark County is at Kewanee Saturday and at Mercer County on Monday.

Stark Co. boys start strong

Rebels 3rd at Wethersfield tourney after 3-2 start

By JEFF LAMPE

For The Prairie News

KEWANEE – One year ago, moving to the competitive Wally Keller Invitational Tournament at Wethersfield was a tall order for the Stark County boys basketball team.

Not this season. The Rebels finished 3-2 at the tournament to finish third and to earn praise from coaches involved.

One of those pleased was Stark County Coach Dustin Browning, who said, "I'm really proud of the fight and determination we showed during this tournament. Never gave in to the score and kept playing hard no matter the score or situation."

That determination was evident Saturday, as Stark County topped Elmwood, 57-52. James Groter had 12 of his 17 points in the fourth quarter, as the Rebels outscored Elmwood, 20-15, to clinch the win. Daniel Kieser added 15 in the win and Luke Rewerts had 8.

"They play hard, they're long and they're athletic," Elmwood Coach Josh Fugitt said. "And they definitely exposed some of our weaknesses on defense in the second half. Some things didn't bounce our way offensively and our defense isn't good enough to make up for it right now."

That ended a two-game losing skid for Stark County, which fell to Putnam County (51-49) and Bureau Valley (60-44) at Wethersfield. Kieser scored 13 points, Rewerts 11 and Ethan Unhold Continued on Page 11
