Bumble bees busiest of the pollinators

In 2007, Congress declared the month of June to be National Pollinator Month. Their press release told us we should "celebrate" pollinators, whatever that means, and that we should help increase awareness of the importance of pollinators, especially insects and bees.

I personally have a fondness for a multi-talented pollinator, the bumble bee. These chubby little creatures go to work early in the spring while other pollinators stay home trying to keep warm. The bumble bee's large body and thick hairy coat allow it to fly even poor at the job when compared to other on cold spring days. For added warmth a bumble bee can vibrate its wing muscles to generate heat, raising its body temperature 30 degrees in just a few minutes. Thus the burly, bundled-up bumble bees can forage in cold weather unfavorable to other polli-

Pump problems

Galva pool closed for year

By CAROL TOWNSEND

For The Prairie News

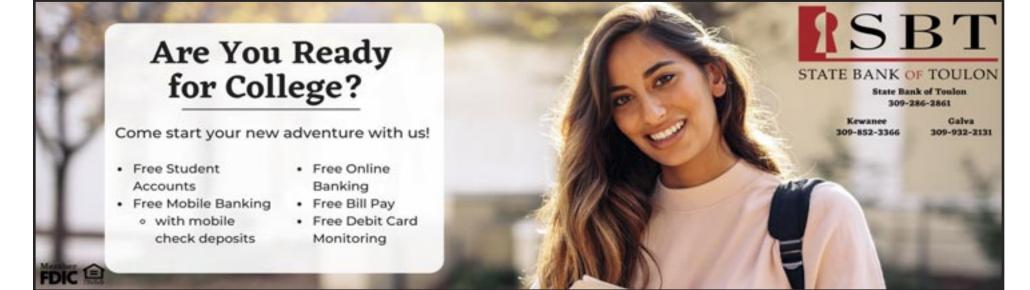

GALVA – Swimming ended early this year in Galva due to a pump malfunction that caused an early closure of the Park District pool.

A new pump was ordered but has not yet arrived. The Park District board hopes to receive the pump and have it installed in time for 2023. The pool had passed state inspection and was to remain open until Aug. 12.

In other park district business, Katie Laurin is stepping down as board president and pool manager and Lauren Hopping is stepping down as head lifeguard. The board is seeking a pool manager, head lifeguard and lifeguards.

The maintenance crew will install foot rests on the bleachers. Doug Anderson is checking on material needed. Superintendent Nathan Glaser thanked Tyler Glaser and Doug Anderson for their help this year at the pool and Larry Halsall for fixing the mower. And a new memorial tree for Joe Griggs will be planted this fall.

Finally, the Back Road Music Festival will be held at the park district on Saturday, Aug. 13.

I was surprised to learn that several species of bumble bees live happily in the Alaskan tundra, some are even found above the Arctic Circle, where those little fur coats no doubt come in pretty handy.

Unlike honey bees, bumble bees don't build hives or store honey. A bumble bee queen, after hibernating alone underground through the winter, emerges in early spring and finds a good nesting site. She feeds on the nectar of early flowers while collecting pollen to take back to her nest. After building up a store of pollen and nectar, she lays her first set of eggs. After a few days the eggs hatch into larvae, which the queen cares for until they spin a cocoon and turn into adult bees.

The queen's first broods will be all worker bees. Some will guard the nest while others will gather pollen and nectar and care for the queen's successive broods. All the while the queen stays home in the nest laying

Later in the season the queen begins to lay unfertilized eggs which become males and fertilized eggs, which become new queens. The males and new queens leave the nest and never return. They spend their days trying to mate.

As winter approaches the original queen and her workers die off, while the newly fertilized queens search for a safe place to spend the winter and start the process all over again.

Bumble bees pollinate many important food crops – raspberries, strawberries, blueberries, cranberries, apples and plums. They're the sole pollinator of several wildflowers, including our native monkshood, as well as alfalfa and red clover, important animal feeds.

They are especially important pollinators of tomatoes, potatoes, eggplants and peppers. The flowers of these plants contain both male and female parts but the pollen must be jarred loose by wind or some other disturbance. Bumble bees, using their ability to "sonicate" or buzz-pollinate the flowers, make fertilization pos-

Growers of greenhouse crops once spent time every day hand-pollinating their tomato, pepper and cucumber crops using a device similar to an electric toothbrush. But in the 1970s, scientists developed techniques that allowed for the commercial production of bumble bee colonies. Greenhouse growers eagerly hired the bumble bees to pollinate their crops.

The growers are pleased with their bumble bee workers. They're willing to work seven days a week and never call in sick or require health insurance and 401K plans.

Some strawberry growers are using bumble bees, not just as pollinators, but as little crop dusters to apply fungicides to their fields of strawberries.

Commercial strawberry farmers spray their crops with chemical fungicides in an effort to control gray mold. It is a fungal disease that can ruin strawberries in the field and in your refrigerator. But recently, scientists have developed biocontrol agents, "antagonistic" fungi, that can stop gray mold in its tracks.

To be effective, these biocontrol agents must be applied directly to the strawberry flower as it is blooming. Farmers in Europe are using bumble bees to deliver the fungicide to the flowers. Special devices mounted over the doorways of the commercial bumble bee nests dust the bees with the fungicide powder as they pass through. As the bees pollinate the flowers and gather nectar, they deposit the fungicide right on target.

The Women's Club will be serving root beer floats in front of Farm Business Farm Management on Saturday, Aug. 6, from noon until 3 p.m. as part of the Old Settlers' Association festivities. Full Schedule, Page 6.

What are your favorite activities together?

Bonnie: Curling. We were looking for something to do when we lived in Michigan and friends invited us to a curling club.

Bonnie: I had a lot of girlfriends and GAA was a lot of fun.

Don: Basketball – and all the sports.

What would people be surprised to know about you?

Bonnie: I got hit by a skydiver! In 1984, we were at a professional soccer game in the Tulsa University Stadium. Don and I were seated in the end zone to watch the game and there were five skydivers who were to come into the stadium before the game. The second skydiver was going to miss the field and was drifting away from us toward a busy street. He let go of his controls, accelerated, and crashed into us. He torqued my knee and snapped off the end of my tibia.

Don: I went to Wabash College, which is a men's school and I joined a fraternity. Every year at Homecoming they had a Homecoming queen contest. I was Homecoming queen in the fall of 1961. I dressed up as a Playboy Bunny and a short kid dressed as Hugh Hefner was my escort.

Is there anything that you would like to add that we haven't discussed?

Bonnie: I volunteer at the Stark County Food Pantry. I think volunteer work is extremely impor-

Don: I've been the superintendent of the Toulon Cemetery for 23 years. I enjoy that. It fits in with my genealogy hobby.

Vacation essentials: mayonnaise jar, fish tackle

Each of my parents had an unwritten list of essentials to take when our family - of, holy cow, eight – left the southern Illinois dairy farm of my youth on our annual August vacation.

For example, my mother never crossed the state line without a wide-mouth quart jar filled with soapy water and a washcloth so she could keep her children "presentable," presumably in case of a car crash.

I can't count the number of times my face was scrubbed with a soapy, cold washcloth from an upcycled mayonnaise jar.

Also, Mom always packed an oilcloth tablecloth just in case we stopped to eat in the middle of nowhere after leaving home in the middle of the night to arrive in the middle of Missouri or Kentucky or Tennessee two hours early.

But there was never really any "just in case." Every year on the first morning of vacation, we'd stop at some park for a "light breakfast" packed by Mom. Light meant everything but the fattened calf: two kinds of breakfast rolls and coffee cake, hard boiled eggs, summer sausage, cheese, a thermos of coffee, a jar of milk, jelly, butter and silverware.

What, you never took your silverware on vacation?

Every year it happened in the same way: Before the car even came to a complete stop, Mom would pop out of the car's front seat with the tablecloth in one hand and the quart jar of soapy water in the other.

Since we often vacationed with my grandparents, Grandma usually arrived a few minutes later to perform the same tablecloth-mayonnaise jar move within seconds of Mom's.

For his part, Dad never left for vacation without his fishing tackle in top condition. He'd spend one night the week before slowly clearing his tackle box of dried minnows from the year before and "rewrapping" putting new fishing line on – his best spinning reels.

It was a religious experience to him because, like baptism, this singular immersion in all things fish foretold of salvation - a week's reprieve, anyway - from 100 Holsteins, 3 hired men and endless acres of tall corn, weedy soybeans and unmowed set-aside.

Almost as spiritual was Dad reacquainting himself with his most sacred possession, an early 1950s, 5 h.p. Johnson outboard motor that would putt-putt him in a sodden, 16-foot wooden fishing boat around some state park lake in search of his great white whale, a bucketful of black crappie.

Getting it ready meant attaching it to a 55-gallon oil drum that he had cut the top out and filled with water. After fiddling with this knob and that valve, he'd pull the rope and blub, blub, blub – it would fire and his wide "I'm a kid again" smile would appear.

My four brothers and I had a ritual, too; we'd fight over what clothes to take because we five had to share one suitcase. Mom often settled the civil war by reminding us that whatever we packed had to be "washed in the lake" because she mandfoodfile.com.

was not doing laundry on vacation. That limited our already limited wardrobe to cut-off jeans and flip-

I don't remember packing any cooler other than the flimsy styrofoam ones that had a lifespan shorter than a mosquito. I do remember Dad buying blocks of ice for some cooler - maybe it was a tub - that carried the week's necessities like milk for us, butter for Mom and Busch Bavarian for him-

The very best part of every vacation, however, was the evening of the final day. About an hour before arriving home, Dad would pull into some drive-in diner and order hamburgers, french fries and chocolate milkshakes for everyone. What a

Maybe the most remarkable ritual of all was the fact that we - eight of us in one stuffed, stuffy station wagon - even went on a week's vacation every August. I had few farm friends that could make the same claim. How did Mom and Dad do

If you asked them, I'm pretty sure the answer would begin with, "Well, get yourself a wide-mouth mayonnaise jar..."

> Although well written, I find Mr. Klopfenstein's pro-life letter both harsh and judgmental!

I am a professed Christian and also consider myself Pro-Life. But life extends well beyond conception and birth to include a long period when a child requires at least one if not two mature parents to nurture and watch over that child until the child becomes a young adult.

I am also pro-adoption which includes a woman's right to lovingly give up her child for adoption. There are thousands of couples waiting to adopt an infant or child who don't ever receive that call from an adoption agency. My heart goes out to these couples!

But please put yourself in the shoes of the pregnant girl or woman who, for whatever reason, knows she doesn't want to carry that fetus for nine months knowing full-well she doesn't have the means or the ability to raise that child from birth to young adulthood.

What should she do, especially if she doesn't have a loving husband and family to help her raise that child?

The Bible does not clearly address this all-important question. In my opinion, that decision has to come form the heart of the pregnant woman and not from the govern-

America has lost its way

America has lost its way, or so I worry. Can we get back on track? What do we mean by The American Way? Each of us might define it differently, though I think there are some common threads. In 1937, social commentator William Herberg gave it a shot in a lengthy paragraph, from which I extract here some key words: self-reliant, striving, success, humanitarian, idealistic, stewardship, character.

America helped save the globe during World War II, with our sacrifice and materiel. When I grew up post-

WWII, America was on top. The rest of the developed world was prostrate from war devastation. We had some swagger. We were positive and generous. It was a great time to grow up. I thought of America as perfect, though we weren't. After all, blacks were still being casually lynched in the South, and until this year Congress hadn't been able to pass a simple anti-lynching

Since my childhood, other nations have been catching up with us, as would be expected of energetic, welleducated, emerging nations. We also lost some of the kick in our step with our failure in Vietnam.

In the 1970-80s, we allowed our manufacturing base to be hollowed out. And we can't seem to climb up from mediocrity in educational achievement. This may not have been important when I was a kid, but is now. Our university and governmentsponsored research have been top drawer, yet China is investing much more in their rapidly developing research centers and universities (they know where the future lies!) than are

Nor can we seem to resolve our "us v. them" squabbles among whites, blacks and browns; elites v. rural folks, and regarding gender roles. Further, luxury has a corrosive effect on the spirit, I would contend, possibly weakening our resilience as a people. In three visits to China as a visiting professor over the past 15 years, I found the Chinese are not that impressed with us, maybe agreeing with their supreme leader Xi Jinping that Americans have become soft.

Then, we have the mind-bending, unsettling, warp speed rate of change in our world, with digital devices pushing the human aside, or threatening to do so. And, of course, the pandemic. And now, medieval bestiality in Ukraine, which I had hoped, naively, we had evolved away from in the 21st Century.

So, we have little swagger left. Where are we? Where are we headed?

Many of my senior generation appear to have given up, taking their still fertile brains to Florida and the links. The political class on the Left appears to think the way out of our plight, if such we be in, is to shower us with government money. On the Right, the objective appears to be to protect the incredible wealth being scooped up by a tiny fraction of us.

From what I see among my former university students, our well-educated young are buoyant with energy and optimism, which is great. At 81, I think my generation, with its immense aggregate wealth, needs to do a better job of supporting my former students, and our grandchildren.

I have cynically mused that the U.S. could use a "good little war" to unite us in behalf of a renewal, an awakening. We have such a little war in progress in the Ukraine, plus an economic war with China. In the Middle Ages, war was economic development; today economic development is "war." This can be seen by China's efforts to extend its sphere of dominant influence, from Southeast Asia to Africa.

Yet most Americans are so consumed with our pursuit of material stuff that we are blithely ignorant of what is transpiring in the world beyond our border.

If anything, The American Way has been about success, achievement, stability, example. These are the really big issues that aspiring national leaders should be trumpeting to the American public. Yet, I fear many socalled leaders fear such declarations would fail to capture voter imagination and spirit, and so they tap into voter fears and anger. One of the downsides of democracy is that, to stay in office, leaders often become

I smile at the bumper stickers: "Ask me how much I love my grandkids!" How much, indeed? Enough to provide them a stable nation and world? If we can do that, we will have reclaimed The American Way.

Credit reforms needed for new farmers

By TIMOTHY EGGERT

FarmWeek

One of Adam Brown's most painful financial decisions was selling the first tractor his father rode.

"While that was a difficult and emotional step to take, the survival of my farm for the next generation is my top priority, just like it was for the generation that passed it on to me," Brown told federal lawmakers July 14, his voice cracking.

But trading the 1950 Ford Ferguson T20 for cash was not enough.

"I still needed some help to keep things running and the loan programs that were available for young, beginning and underserved producers came through for me in one of the most difficult and stressful times of my life," he said.

Brown, who grows corn and soybeans in Macon County, testified before the U.S. House Ag Committee on behalf of Illinois Farm Bureau. He was one of five panelists advocating for reforms to the credit title of the 2023 farm bill.

Brown recounted his difficult experiences navigating the Farm Service Agency's (FSA) Direct Farm Ownership Joint Financing Loan and Marketing Assistance Loan programs and the Natural Resource Conservation Service's (NRCS) Conservation Stewardship Program (CSP), in which he enrolled to finance buying out other heirs to his late grandfather's farm estate.

While Brown was able to acquire some land through the lending programs, he still faced the "inefficiencies of government that oftentimes prevent new and beginning farmers from gaining access to the programs they need to stay afloat until they have their feet under them."

When lawmakers rewrite the farm bill credit title, Brown said, they should ensure everyone who could qualify for a federal farm loan has equal access it, and that farm operating and farm ownership loan limits keep pace with surging input and land costs.

Brown also said USDA should revise and align its definition of a beginning farmer and rancher and better communicate and educate farmers on ag lending programs.

Nathan Kauffman, Kansas Federal Reserve Bank vice president, said those changes will be vital as farm loan interest rates continue to increase, as demand for farm loans are expected to "rise notably" and as capital spending is expected to decline for the first time since 2020.

"Some producers may face more substantial credit challenges than others," Kauffman said. "While the strength of farm income these past two years is likely to sustain credit conditions in agriculture for some time, some borrowers may face heightened financial stress in the year ahead if costs continue to rise, and commodity prices ease further."

Many members of the committee echoed the reforms offered by Brown, including U.S. Rep. Rodney Davis, R-Taylorville, who said limiting access to ag lending entities like the Farm Credit System "will only discourage individuals ... from seeking careers in farming and agriculture."

Brown agreed, noting about 35% of new operating and real estate notes that come to Farm Credit Illinois are from young, beginning and small farmers.

Despite receiving initial financing, those evergreen farmers are forced to seek more loans to keep growing and to remain competitive with other, larger farms, Brown said. But because they are new to the industry, those farmers don't have the production or credit history required by FSA to qualify for a lending program.

That cycle has hit even harder with soaring fertilizer, equipment and land costs — some Illinois ag land sells for $20,000 per acre and cash rents keeping rising — Brown said, telling the panel that loan limits and caps on operation notes should be increased in the upcoming legislation.

"And I would ask that we have predictability going into the next farm bill," Brown said. "We have so much volatility throughout my operation, throughout the ag economy. If we know what we're dealing with we can better shape (our operations) ...we can plan better, and that provides us peace of mind."

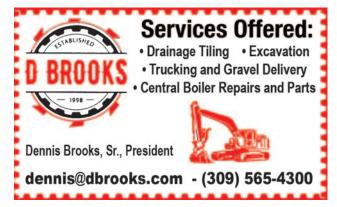

This story was distributed through a cooperative project between Illinois Farm Bureau and the Illinois Press Association. For more food and farming news, visit FarmWeekNow.com.

By JOHN A. BALLENTINE

For The Prairie News

WYOMING - The Stark County School District board of education met in a special meeting on July 27 to discuss a "Consolidated District Plan."

According to school Superintendent Brett Elliott, "The consolidated district plan is a grant summary of all state and federal grants received each year and our plan for expenditures."

After holding an executive session, the board approved the following personnel

Brooke Landcaster as ELA/Electives

- Shelly Allen as speech coach.
- Mary Jo Groter as junior high volleyball coach.
 - Kari Bush as school nurse.
- Donnie Peterson as junior high volunteer assistant baseball coach.
- Julie Shambaugh and Barbara Ingels as Toulon kitchen staff.
- Mary Jason as elementary school morning crossing guard.
- · Jackie Carroll as district truancy of-

Additionally, the board accepted the resignations of:

- Angie McGrath as school counselor.

Illinois declared monkeypox disaster area

By JERRY NOWICKI

Capitol News Illinois SPRINGFIELD - Gov. JB Pritzker issued a public health emergency declaration and declared Illinois a disaster area in response to the monkeypox virus Monday, a move his office said would help mobilize resources.

The governor's office said the proclamation will aid in moving vaccines to the most impacted communities and will allow the Illinois Department of Public Health to expand vaccine and testing capacities with the help of the Illinois Emergency Management Agency and state and federal funds.

The World Health Orgnization declared monkeypox a Public Health Emergency of International Concern last week, and Illinois has reported 520 cases thus far, according to the governor's office. The disease, believed to spread through close contact, can cause a variety of symptoms, the most visible being a painful or itchy

With 85 percent of the cases in Chicago as of last week, the city had received 18,707 vaccine doses while the state had received 7,371, sending 4,631 of them to Chicago. Another 13,000 additional state doses are expected from the federal government "in the near future," according to the governor's

Last week, IDPH warned in a news release that vaccine demand was "outstripping supplies." The department advised local public health officials that "unless people are in certain elevated risk categories, they should receive only an initial dose of the MPV vaccine until more supplies become available."

According to the CDC, monkeypox symptoms can include headache, fever, respiratory symptoms, muscle aches, chills and exhaustion. The most visible symptom is a rash that may be located on the face, mouth, hands, feet, chest, genitals or other areas. Most people who contract monkeypox will get the rash, which can look like pimples or blisters and may be painful or itchy.

The disease spreads through close, personal contact, such as skin-toskin contact, direct contact with the monkeypox rash or through the bodily fluids of an infected person, according to the CDC. It can also be spread by touching objects, fabrics and surfaces used by someone with monkeypox. It can also spread from contact with infected animals or toms start until the rash has Pritzker described the spread.

Princeville couple praise community after fire

By NICK VLAHOS

For The Prairie News

 $PRINCEVILLE-Jeff\ and\ Sharon$ Ussery were at work Tuesday morning in Peoria when a friend called to tell them their rural-Princeville residence was struck by lightning.

Meanwhile, a passerby called for emergency help. Someone stopped and knocked on doors of the 122year-old house to see if anybody was inside.

For the notifications, for the first responders who helped douse the resulting fire and for the lack of injuries, the Usserys are grateful.

"Oh, it could have been a lot worse," Jeff Ussery said. "I want to say this: This community is awesome."

A severe early-morning storm that passed through the Peoria area spawned lightning that struck shortly before 9 a.m. at 22612 N. Illinois Route 91, about 2½ miles north of Princeville.

The attic of the three-story house caught fire. The rest of it sustained significant water damage, according to Ussery. No official financial estimate was available, but the house was not a total loss, according to the Peoria County Sheriff's Office.

"(It) looks pretty bad right now, but we're insured and it's fixable," Ussery said about noon, not long after firefighters departed. "Very worst-case scenario, I do have a roof over my head and I can sleep in my kitchen."

The local chapter of the American Red Cross was to contact the Usserys regarding possible lodging.

A yellow Labrador Retriever was rescued from the house, according to the sheriff. Other dogs and cats on the property were reported safe.

Firefighters from the Akron-Princeville, Brimfield, Dunlap, Elmwood, Toulon and Wyoming departments responded. Route 91 was closed for about three hours.

Ussery said he and his wife are proud of the house they moved into nine years ago this month. They intend to restore it.

"The reason I live in the country and in a small community is because (of) people ... that take the time to dial 9-1-1, where some of the other areas I've lived in before, maybe they don't," Ussery said. "They drive on by and it's like, 'Well, somebody's already probably

Prices limiting farm expansion

By DANIEL GRANT

FarmWeek

A significant increase in farmland prices and low turnover rate are making it more difficult for farmers to expand their operations. And perhaps the demographic of farmers getting squeezed the most in the current economic environment are millennials, those between the ages of 26-41, according to AgAmerica, the nation's largest non-bank agricultural lender.

AgAmerica recently reported more than 40 percent of U.S. farmland is owned by people older than 65. And now younger generations, who often have fewer resources compared to veteran farmers, are facing another real estate barrier to enter the ag industry as farmland prices surge.

"It's so tough to maintain an operation when it comes to rising operating and input costs," Pat Spinosa, director of business development at AgAmerica, told FarmWeek. "Then, when you look at expansion, it's nearly impossible for some people when you look at these prices."

The Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago reported farmland values in its district increased 23 percent during the first quarter of 2022 compared to last year.

This follows increases of Illinois farmland values between 2020-21 of 26 percent for excellent ground to an average of $14,700 per acre, 24 percent for good ground ($10,710 per acre) and 21 percent for average land ($7,455 per acre), according to the Illinois Society of Professional Farm Managers and Rural Appraisers.

Last year marked the fourth time since 1970 Illinois farmland values increased 20 percent or more in a calendar year.

"We have to get the younger generation into farming but, with these farmland prices, many can't afford to buy a $15,000 or $20,000 piece of dirt and then have to deal with the high input costs on top of that," Spinosa said.

A low turnover rate of farmland, about 2 percent per year, and intense competition also continues to drive the market and put the squeeze on some potential buyers.

Farmers remained the top buyer of farmland in the state last year, but just barely, at 52 percent. Investors reeled in 33 percent of farmland purchases and institutions grabbed another 10 percent, with the remaining 5 percent made up of individuals who purchased land for recreational purposes, according to ISPFMRA.

"We do see a bit of inflation hedge with farmland," said David Oppedahl, senior business economist at the Chicago Fed. "Farmers and investors are interested in locking in value there through purchasing farmland.

"In the current inflationary environment, ag's been helped by some factors (commodity prices received by farmers increased 31 percent compared to last year, prior to a recent sell off in the market)," he noted. "At the same time, input costs are going up a lot, so that squeezes margins."

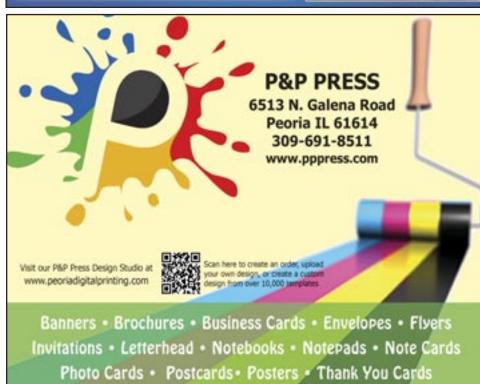

AgAmerica encourages farmers, particularly those among the younger generations, to build relationships with lenders and fellow farmers.

"We've got a generational gap between who's farming now and we've got millennials coming into farming," he said.

Building relationships is also vital for rental ground. Of farmers enrolled in Illinois Farm Business Farm Management, 23 percent owned their land, 30 percent had a crop share and 47 percent had a cash rental arrangement in 2021.
