320 MAIN ST. GALVA, IL 61434

For The Prairie News WYOMING - The Stark County Board of Education approved issuing $6 million in bonds or certificates to fund construction of a new gym and all-weather track at the Toulon High School campus.

During its Sept. 25 meeting, the board authorized debt certificates not to exceed $6 million in 2023 Series bonds. It is projected the track will cost $1.595 million with a start date in the spring of 2024 and completion expected by fall.

There are two different options for the new gymnasium. Option One offers 1,550 seats while Option Two offers1,250 seats. Additionally, margins around the basketball court would be increased to allow more space for foot traffic. Members of the public voiced opinions about the projects.

Toulon resident Linda Dean wants to stop the gym project and said, "My taxes have gone up 46 percent over the years."

Toulon resident Sam Rice said, "The Toulon cinder track is outdated and wasn't converted. Past administrations seemed to leave out track when it came to sports. I'd like to see Stark County start hosting track meets again."

Leslie Bowser said she supports both the gym and the track. She said Stark County pays Galva to use its all-weather track and Galva collects thousands of dollars that Stark County should be collecting. She said these projects move the school district forward for the future. Prior to the regular meeting, the

Of harvest tales, cat tails & Bell Trucking

Rambling through central Illinois, catching up with cougars and lizards.

We asked for harvest stories from the past and several of you fine readers responded. Thank you. Truth be told, we could have just enlisted Larry Benson and had enough to fill the paper. The affable Maquon farmer recalls so many details of his farming past that there was not room for them in our Central Illinois Farmer section, found inside on pages 9-16. Benson's recollections underline how much farming has changed since the 1960s, when corn pickers were common in fields that might yield 100 bushels of corn per acre, unless hailstorms stripped the ears away or drought slowed their growth. As Benson said, "It's a wonder anybody stayed in farming in the 1970s and 1980s." Things are easier today. Seed genetics have improved yields and the drought tolerance of crops. Machinery is bigger. Harvest is faster. Benson recalled rising at 4 a.m. and picking corn until 2-3 p.m. many days. All that to pick 10-15 acres in a day. Then he and his late brother, Jerry Benson, would spend the evening repairing the family's fleet of 10 grain trucks. "Sometimes we could keep all 10 running, but not very often," he said.

Hard as it was, you can tell Benson enjoyed harvest and the memories it created. Part of that is thanks to the time spent with his father, Don, and brothers Jerry and Gary. But there's an overall sense of camaraderie that fills the fall air. You see that every year when fellow farmers pitch in to help an ailing neighbor get his crops into the bins. And you see that when problems occur. Benson recalls a combine catching fire a few years ago while he was harvesting near Douglas. Phil Goedecke stopped to call the Elba-Salem Fire Department and suggested Benson move two grain trucks, a pickup and a trailer he had parked in the south end of the field. The trucks got moved – fortunately, since the fire reached that part of the field before it was put out by neighbor John McKinty, who had borrowed a tractor and chisel plow from neighbor Wayne Davis to halt the spreading flames.

Word is circulating around Brimfield of a recent sighting of a large cat, estimated to be 4 feet long with a "long straight tail" near Maher Road. Is there a cougar in Peoria County? Possibly. Big cats do tend to follow river corridors. But if a cougar is nearby, surely somebody has pictures, given that archery deer season starts Sunday and the woods are chock full of trail cameras right now. Most hunters have more pictures of deer on their cameras than they do of family members.

Kudos to Bell Trucking for surviving 90 years in small business, including the Depression, several wars and various economic downturns. Stop by the Galva business at 303 SE 8th Ave. this Saturday between noon and 4 p.m. to wish Duane and Steve Bell well during their open house. ... Hit my head hard on the corner of a cabinet the other day and jiggled a memory out of the recesses of my brain. Back in the day, I spent some memorable late evenings with a group of Vietnam veterans who told stories of a unique southeast Asian lizard whose rude sounds haunted them. Google "Tokay lizard," but only play the unique calls when alone. As one online lizard seller noted, "They are popular in the reptile trade due to their striking appearance and distinctive vocalizations." Myself, I have the Tokay's vocalization cued up on the computer, ready for spam callers. ... Parting shot: I'm actually looking forward to spam calls.

Drone use for hunting is prohibited in Illinois

SPRINGFIELD - The use of unmanned aircraft, or drones, for any aspect of hunting or recovery of wildlife is unlawful, the Illinois Department of Natural Resources is reminding the public.

"Not only is drone use for hunting unlawful in Illinois, it goes against the spirit of fair chase and widely accepted hunting ethics," said Jed Whitchurch, director of the IDNR Office of Law Enforcement. "Illinois Conservation Police officers will be monitoring for drone use during the fall and winter hunting seasons. We encourage all hunters to familiarize themselves with the Wildlife Code, abide by the law, and have a safe and successful hunting season."

The fall hunting season kicks into gear on Sunday, Oct. 1, with the opening of archery deer and turkey seasons throughout Illinois.

IDNR and Illinois Conservation Police have received several inquiries from the public about the use of drones for scouting and tracking animals. The unlawful use of drones for hunting could result in enforcement action, including but not limited to the seizure and forfeiture of unlawfully used equipment.

Hunters are advised to review all requirements of the Illinois Wildlife Code, which regulates the taking of wildlife and the use of unmanned aircraft in these situations (520 ILCS 5/2.33(i) and 520 ILCS 5/1.20).

Harvest memories range from rats to family to drunk hogs

By JEFF LAMPE

For Central Illinois Farmer Combines have been running already, and soon every farmer will be in the field for the highlight of the season. A process that used to drag on well into winter will end relatively quickly, thanks to the combination of modern farm machinery, bigger trucks and grain wagons and better hybrids.

But harvest wasn't always a time to sit in a comfy combine and watch a monitor calculate bushels per acre. Here are reader's memories of harvest seasons past.

Who Needs A Combine? Bob Emerick, 85, is a retired farmer who lives halfway between Elmwood and Brimfield. He remembers that not everyone was immediately enamored with the prospect of switching from corn picker to modern combines.

"Back in 1956, I was just out of high school and they were demonstrating a new way of getting corn out with a combine, shelling it with a John Deere 45 combine. My grandfather wanted to know if I wanted to go with him. It was up below the Santa Fe track north of Brimfield, they were demonstrating this combine.

"We went and looked at it, and there he was combining two rows. We never saw anything like that before.

"He said, 'Boy, I think that might be in the future.' Well, standing beside us was Joe Carroll, a shellerman from the Brimfield area, and he said, 'Oh, this will never go over.'

"Well, he didn't want it to in the first place. He was wrong. You know what's happened since. My grandfather always thought ahead on things."

Picket Cribs

Larry Benson of Maquon hails from an era when two-row corn pickers were the norm and when not every farm even had a corn crib. That forced innovation.

"We would build picket cribs," circle with a run down the middle so you could put a sheller in it. You'd fill that up with corn and, when it was full, you'd cover those with boards. Then you'd put another row of pickets on that and fill it up, then another up to three high.

"In the winter, you would sell that corn and shell it. Well, the corn was out in the open in those pickets and there would be snow and ice on top of all that and you'd have to chip it out."

Benson said the weather was the worst problem in those open "cribs," but he recalled other issues in some of the enclosed wooden cribs that are all but gone nowadays.

"When you got into a closed crib, there would be mice in there and rats in there," Benson said. "You wanted to make sure you kept your pant legs inside your boots, because those rats and mice would try to run up your pant leg. I've seen guys shuck their pants to try to get the rat or mouse out of there."

Bank Boards

Ardeanne Ekena of Elmwood recalls walking home from school with her brother during harvest season to see her grandfather waiting with a tractor and wagon for the youngsters to help hand-pick corn.

"The wagon was an old wooden-wheel wagon with a narrow box about 4 feet high. As one stood at the rear of the wagon and on the left side, there were one or two boards placed on top. These were called 'bank boards.'

"As the ears of corn were picked, they were thrown into the wagon. From time to time the thrower misjudged his or her strength and an ear of corn could possibly miss its destination. In that case, hopefully it would hit the bank board and fall into the "If it missed the wagon entirely, that was my brother's and my job to make sure that ear was retrieved. Brother and I didn't pick much corn. We just enjoyed being a part of the early harvest.

"To me it is still a joy to be a part of harvest season. With the beauty of the trees at this time of year and to walk into the cornfield and hear the rustle of the cornstalks under foot provides a time to reflect on all the miracles God has provided in being able to see another year's crops being harvested. To provide food treats for those working in the fields and, too, just being able to climb in the cabs of combines and tractors to go along for the ride is awesome."

A Real Team Effort

Sharon Yess Chenoweth of Macomb has a memory from her days growing up in Jubilee Township south of Princeville.

"I don't remember how old I was, but I can still picture in my mind what happened. My Mom told me to stay in the yard and play on the swing that hung from the old walnut tree. She said she was going to go north of the house to the cornfield to help Dad by bringing the team of horses and the wagon back to the barnyard.

"I remember her telling me that I would be able to see her, and she wouldn't be gone long. In the distance, I could see her as she opened the gate, drove the team through, and then I saw the horses running as fast as they could to get 'home' with Mom trying to stop a runaway team.

"Farming was and still is a team effort involving the whole family – whether it's watching, working or waiting."

A Bullet Hole

Larry McCoy of Davenport, Iowa, grew up near Champaign and has a vivid memory from one harvest in the 1950s.

"It may have been 1954 or 1955. I know I didn't yet have my driver's license; that would happen when I reached age 16 in 1956. It must have been a Saturday because I wasn't in school.

"Lacking a driver's license didn't mean that I couldn't drive on the farm ... so, while my dad hauled a load of ear corn to the hiker to unload into the pole crib with the Model G John Deere (which started by manually spinning the flywheel), I drove the John Deere Model B, and pulled a used New Idea one-row corn picker – yep, a one-row corn picker – along with a wagon that collected the ears.

"This picker was prior to the combines with corn heads that actually shelled the corn in the field. This picker would pinch the ear off the stalk, after which a long spiral-shaped shaft would carry it to the husking bed where the ear would be spun to tear off the husks, then dumped into a mini-hiker which would transport the ear up to a tube where it would be dumped into the wagon.

"At the far end of the field, as I turned to attack the next row, I waved at three pheasant hunters on the farm west of ours. I thought no more about them until about halfway through the field, I heard a strange sound like a 'thang' which seemed to come from the back of the picker. I stopped the tractor and, as my dad had drilled into my head, shut off the power take off (PTO) before climbing down off the tractor seat.

"I did a slow walkaround looking for anything unusual, anything that had snapped or otherwise broken, which could have caused the strange noise. The visible moving parts looked OK. I was just about ready to get back on the tractor when I noticed it ... a small hole in the housing of the husking bed. Closer examination gave me the answer; it turned out to be a bullet hole.

"I said a quick prayer of thanks that it didn't hit me, climbed back on the tractor and tackled the rest of the corn row. As I continued on through the field, two questions swirled in my mind:

"1. Who uses a rifle instead of a shotgun for pheasant hunting?

"2. If he couldn't spot something as big as a corn picker, should he actually be carrying a gun?"

Drunk Hogs

Dorothy Schmidt of Toulon wrote a memory of Al Appenheimer's sorghum mill south of Toulon that operated from 1921-45 and at one point was the largest in Illinois, producing 10,000 gallons per year. One year, black smut afflicted the sorghum cane heads and produced black specks in the sorghum juice. To remove the imperfections, Appenheimer ran juice through a slurry of clay that absorbed the smut and particles.

As a side note to that stroke of genius, the clay also reduced the amount of particles skimmed out of the sorghum juice and dumped into a waste barrel. The waste barrel was usually emptied daily and fed to the hogs. But since the barrel took longer to fill that year, the skimmings inside fermented. Wrote Schmidt, "There were many drunk hogs that year in the Appenheimer feed lot. Some lay in the lot and squealed; others were completely passed out, grunting only occasionally."

Benson recalled. "You'd take a row of fence pickets and make a wagon.

New technology for cover crops

By NICK VLAHOS For Central Illinois Farmer GALVA - There's nothing undercover about efforts to encourage more farmers to sow cover crops, plants that can improve soil health and agriculture management.

Earlier this month, one of those cover-crop efforts was well above ground. In the form of a drone, it hovered high over Brian Corkill's farm east of Galva.

The drone's presence was courtesy of University of Illinois Extension. Dennis Bowman, an extension specialist in digital agriculture, used remote control to maneuver the drone above one of Corkill's cornfields as it scattered cover-crop seeds.

Champaign-based Bowman said it was his first drone presentation. About two dozen farmers and others who gathered on the Corkill spread looked to the cloudy sky with interest. Earlier, they looked to the ground.

Following a couple of futile attempts, Bowman activated a squat, box-like robot that disappeared between rows of corn and returned, eventually. Like the drone, the robot also is a cover-crop seed spreader, albeit not yet as advanced technologically. "The robot is still a prototype, so it still has some problems," Bowman said.

But both tools are examples of emerging, non-traditional ways to seed cover crops - something only about 8% of Illinois farmers plant, according to extension officials. The best planting times are in September and October, when farmers are busy harvesting cash crops like corn and soybeans.

Rachel Curry, an extension agriculture and agribusiness educator, said the new technology can make it easier for farmers to consider planting off-season rye and barley, among other cover crops. "We're trying to find ways to make cover crops work for the farmer and fit into their operation," Curry said.

Farmers can hire contractors to use airplanes and helicopters that scatter cover-crop seeds. But drones and robots might provide better seed penetration, according to Bowman. They also might allow farmers to bring that planting operation in house.

"Farmers that have a desire and a love for technology, I can see them having this," Bowman said. "This is an opportunity for them to take control. You're not dependent on somebody else. Having that technology in your hands to use Continued on Page 3

COVER CROP: Drones still limited

The value of cover cropping extends beyond an individual farmer's field, according to Bowman and others.

Cover crops can benefit soil microbiology, which can lead to improved crop yields. They can manage soil erosion and quality as well as weeds and pests. They also can help reduce downstream water pollution from chemical nitrogen fertilizer, among other things. Such a problem is prevalent in the Gulf of Mexico.

"We want to keep the nutrients in the soil. And one of the best ways to do that is to add some biology, some plants that are growing that will soak up those nutrients and lock them up in their own bodies," Bowman said.

"They'll either die off over the winter or be killed off in the spring to release those nutrients back into the soil as they decompose. We've kept them there over the winter so that they're not washing down the Mississippi (River)."

Corkill has been planting cover crops for about a dozen years on his 1,000 or so acres. He said the benefits might not be evident the first few years after farmers begin a cover-crop schedule.

"It is a significant change in mind-set and management," Corkill said. "I think for the most part, guys are willing to adopt some new practices. It just depends on where they're at in their career."

Paul and Nick Appell, who observed Bowman's demonstrations, use planes to plant cover crops on the 2,000 acres of corn and beans they farm between Galva and Victoria. It didn't appear the Appells are quite ready to adopt the new technology, but they did appear intrigued.

"I really see the drones coming on faster than anything, but they can only do so much," said Nick Appell, who is Paul Appell's nephew. "You need a whole fleet of them to do our operation. But just like everything else, I'm sure

refuel

they'll get more efficient and bigger."

Bowman estimated a drone price, all in, at about $20,000. Operators also need Federal Aviation Administration authorization. Robots might cost about $5,000 each.

Corkill acknowledged the new planting methods probably are not affordable or practical right now for many farmers. But like Nick Appell, he suggested technological improvements will change that.

Once one person can operate more than one drone, labor costs might shrink considerably, for one example. Neighboring farmers also could partner to purchase drones for mutual use.

"The longer it's out, the cheaper it becomes," Corkill said. "I think the drone can have its place. We're probably not quite there yet, but I don't think the drone is that far away."

Plant corn, soybeans or solar panels?

By RON DIETER For Central Illinois Farmer Should a farmer plant corn or solar panels? That's the question posed by Aaron Smith, professor of agriculture economics at the University of California-Davis. With the push for more renewable energy, solar farms are sprouting on agricultural cropland across the U.S.

To answer the question, Smith used a corn price of $6.75/bushel and a yield of 200 bushels/acre. For solar electricity he used a price of $70/Megawatt hour and an annual yield of 243

www.rennicklawfirm.com

Mwh/acre. These were values existing when he made the calculations last fall. He found that solar energy yielded 13 times more income than a corn crop. Of course, that's income, not profit.

Using these numbers, along with financial data from a 1,000-acre solar farm in Wapello, Iowa, and Illinois crop-budget data to calculate the costs of production, the solar farm in his model was 3.5 times more profitable than corn.

When it comes to supply and demand, however, renewable energy is no different than any other commodity. As supply goes up, price comes down. Renewable energies, both solar and wind, are their own worst enemies. The costs of these technologies is dropping fast as more installations come online, making the energy they produce cheaper.

Smith points out that a drop of just 10% in the price of electricity and the picture is drastically reversed. Corn becomes nearly 10 times more profitable than solar. You can check his numbers online with a search for "Aaron Smith solar farms."

But does this have to be an either-or situation? Why not solar panels and farm crops on the same ground? For example, a farmer could allow space between rows of solar panels to accommodate row-crop machinery. But that would lower the solar yield. What's more, land under the panels would be idle, reducing the crop yield.

That's where agrivoltaic technology enters the picture. That term describes producing crops and solar energy on the same land. Agrivoltaics is relatively new but is being used in the U.S. and Europe.

Several commercial crops - including raspberries, strawberries, broccoli, spinach, potatoes and tomatoes - are shade tolerant and have been successfully grown beneath solar panels. Some crops protected from direct sun and wind are actually more productive under panels than out in open fields. Workers planting and harvesting these crops also appreciate the shade provided by the solar array.

Solar panels are being used by produce farmers to replace plastic high tunnels that protect tender crops from hail, wind, bright sun and frost. High tunnels are labor intensive and easily damaged by wind and hail. Solar panels are designed to withstand such weather.

Bifacial solar panels, two-sided panels made of tempered glass, increase both the electrical output and the crop yield of an agrivoltaic solar farm. Unlike standard one-sided solar panels, bifacial panels are partially transparent, allowing sunlight to pass through to the crop below. The panels utilize direct sunlight but also use light reflected back from the crop below to produce 10% more electricity than a onesided panel.

Bifacial panels and the crop beneath them form a symbiotic relationship. The panels conserve soil moisture and provide shade and shelter to the crop. The transpiring crop in turn lowers the panels' temperature. Cooler panels yield nearly 10% more electricity than the same panels over bare ground.

As long as the push for renewable energy continues, we can expect to see more solar farms. While most people are supportive of renewable energy, they prefer it to be somewhere else. Surveys show, however, that communities are more receptive of agrivoltaic farms because the land is kept in production. while producing renewable energy.

Our machine shed was green, just not the green of today

At the height of the mid-August heat wave, I was relieved when an old friend canceled his planned trip to attend a sprawling, old farm machinery show amid central Illinois' endless, sweltering cornfields.

While both of us love to see Olivers 77s, Super Ms, and Ford 9Ns of our youth, neither of us wants to be as sweaty or dirty during those admiring visits as we were when driving 'em in our hot, dirt-eating youths.

But there is something about those 50-, 60-, and 70 year-old lovingly restored, rustbucket beauties that still attracts an eye, conjures a story, and

> In fact, unlike many other ag journalists, I have only four toy tractors in my office: two that are manufacturer gifts from tractor introductions (the best of which, admittedly, is a very sweet, very big and two are unblemished, warms a heart. Versatile 1150 from 1981)

While we were Oliver people on the southern Illinois dairy farm of my youth, we never owned a Super anything Oliver. We did, however, run a Row Crop 66, Row Crop 77, and Row Crop 88. The 88 was our "big"-when 40 horsepower was big-tractor.

Zack Foose - 309-678-6228

The 77 was Uncle Honey's tractor of choice for two practical reasons. First, my father didn't trust his inattentive, iron-bending uncle with anything associated with the word "big;" alas, no 88 for him. More importantly, the 77 had hydraulics, a require-

GUEBERT ment to raise our

Oliver mower's 7-foot sickle bar when mowing alfalfa, straw, or my mother's perpetually replanted peach trees. And, yes, despite Honey's honestly earned reputation for destroying farm equipment-he did, after all, plow out two telephone poles-Dad had him mow because those four or five cuttings of 100 acres of alfalfa each year intentionally kept him away from the combine, silage wagons, humans, chain saw, cows, fence posts, and telephone poles. Well, mostly.

When the farm moved from 36-in. rows to 30-in., out went the 66, 77, and 88 and in came a new wave of Oliver-and not yet White branded-tractors: a gas 1650, a diesel 1755, and a rugged, log wagon 1850.

The 1650 had a narrow front and the 1755 and 1850 were our first wide fronts.

Of the three, my two older brothers and I often argued over who would get the 1650 for their day's work. Its purring engine, power steering, and narrow front Alan made it the perfect tractor for baling hay, planting corn, chopping stalks, pulling silage wagons, backing a hay wagon into the barn... you name it.

And its best feature was its most important: our farm's first foam tractor seat. Yes, it was plastic covered and, yes, it was a hotplate in the summer and an ice block in the winter. Even at that, the seat wasn't as hot, cold, or hard as the backside-slapping steel seats on the old Oliver fleet that encouraged more standing than sitting while operating.

Honey inherited the stiff, roaring 1850 for both plowing and silage chopping. To his great displeasure, the sickle mower went with the 77. Dad replaced both with a self-propelled, hydrostatic Owatonna haybine and, without any discussion, replaced Honey with me as its only operator.

When White Farm Equipment began to dominate Oliver in the late 1960s, my father's loyalty to the brand ebbed. He was no fan of Case-a 930 Comfort King came and went pretty quickly-and never considered John Deere because he never found a Deere dealer he could bargain with.

He did, however, own a high-hours 4020 at the end of his farming career because, I suspect, its price fit his wallet more than the poorly maintained tractor fit his needs.

His final, go-to "big" tractor was a mid-1970s Ford 9600. It was the only tractor he ever owned with a cab and he all but wore it out over the following decades. It sold for pennies at his retirement auction and holds no special spot in my heart.

Mostly because that space was taken long ago by an Oliver 77.

FBFM has century of helping

By NICK VLAHOS For Central Illinois Farmer Farmers have plenty to worry about in the field. A statewide organization helps them worry a little less about off-the-field, bottom-line aspects of their businesses.

Almost 6,000 farmers and farm landlords are members of Illinois Farm Business Farm Management. The Urbana-based not-for-profit provides financial and production records, computerized business reports, incometax preparation and retirement and estate planning, among other services.

FBFM consultants meet regularly with clients to help interpret reports and offer financial-management advice. Hog and cattle producers also can join FBFM. Carla Doubet, a farm-business consultant based at the FBFM field office in Morton, said she has about 115 clients.

Minimum dues are $720 for the current year, according to Doubet, a Farmington-area native. Rates increase from there, based on farm size. Base dues vary from year to year.

"I feel like they understand the value of the service that they're getting," Doubet said of her clients. "You can go to somebody to get your taxes done for 200 or 300 dollars, but a good accountant doesn't cost you anything, because they're going to add value to your operation by making you more aware of where you are in your business, future and present, and what opportunities there are."

FBFM traces its history almost 100 years, with roots at the University of Illinois. FBFM assumed its current form in 2017, when eight regional associations merged. The organization has 37 field offices, including one in Toulon.

Reports FBFM members receive include comparative analysis based on soil type, number of acres and other variables, Doubet said. Family-living costs also can be calculated and tracked, which can help farmers apply for loans.

"You've got to keep the banker happy," Doubet said. "He's going to look at what the family-living costs are. They can see, 'This is what it was statewide, this is what yours is and what's different about it.'

"(Farmers) become more budget oriented and crunch the numbers a little harder. It helps them seek out maybe some other ideas about how to get their input costs lower and shop around and sharpen the pencil in that regard."

Doubet appears to have some experience in that realm. She grew up on a farm, worked on farms and feed yards and oversaw a 60-cow herd before she began her FBFM career.

"(We) work with a lot of good farmers," said Doubet, who attended Spoon River College in Canton and has a master's degree in accounting. "I have a lot of young farmers that are under 30 years of age. I have their fathers, and for some of them I have their grandfathers."

Website breaks cash-rent taboo

By JEFF LAMPE

For Central Illinois Farmer Among the biggest taboos in the farm world is discussing the price someone pays for cash rent.

Not so for Brad Belser of Peoria and his crew at CommonGround.io, an internet-based land marketplace.

An Iowa State graduate who has been a tillable and recreational land broker for eight years, Belser started CommonGround in 2017 as cashrent.com before changing the name – though not the purpose.

"The goal is to bring transparency to tillable land values for landowners and also to give farmers opportunities to farm ground they may never have had a shot at before," Belser said. "Land values have gone up 30-40% and commodities have stayed strong. The only thing we're not seeing moving is cash rent."

Belser notes that property taxes have also increased steadily, with big jumps in many areas this past year alone.

"It's more expensive to hold ground," Belser said. "So rents need to go up."

To help accomplish that, CommonGround.io offers free cash-rent estimates and allows landowners to list ground they want to rent. Belser said those listings have fueled an average increase of 39.8% for landowner return on investment.

Belser said Common-Ground is more accurate in many cases than USDA cash-rental figures that are based on 10-year averages and rely on self-reporting by farmers.

And Belser said the higher bidder often does not get a land lease.

"Actually, the majority of the time, high bid is not the winner," he said. "We've had folks who say, 'I like having a local guy up the road who can drive The property in Missouri's north-central Saline County sold for $34,800 per acre and brought a total price of $4,002,000 to Dyer and Fenner Auctioneers.

The 115 acres were not sold to an investor but rather to a farmer who has land adjoining the pricy parcel, according to agweb.com. And the ground is reportedly not intended for development.

Jim Rothermich of Iowa Appraisal said bidding started at $15,000 per acre and escalated over the next 15 minutes before a sale was made.

The previous record price was established Nov. 10, 2022, for 73 acres in Sioux County, Iowa, that sold for $30,000 per acre.

• Corn conditions – Donna Rolando of The Center Square reports that drought conditions did not leave Illinois corn farmers without hope this harvest season.

While yields are anticipated to fall below last year's harvest, this season is far from a disaster.

Much of the hope rests with a healing rain in June that played a heavy role in saving the crop from ruin, said Steve Turner, an Illinois Farm Bureau member and a farmer in Cass and Morgan counties.

"I think it's not going to be a bumper or a record yield but I think we're going to be basically holding our own," Turner told The Center Square.

Dry conditions that hit parts of the state won't be much of a challenge now that harvest time is here and expected to continue until October or November.

"I think we really dodged a bullet on a lot of extreme drought this year," Turner said.

The status of the harvest currently puts farmers on par with the five-year average. Turner helped to put the corn harvest figures into perspective.

"The Illinois yield will probably be down from what it was last year," he said.

He estimated that the Illinois corn yield was over 200 bushels on an acre last year. Even if it drops to 188 he said farmers are still raising the crop.

The same could not be said for 2012 when drought conditions did spell disaster for the harvest.

Meanwhile, the condition of the corn is considered variable and includes some reduced yields.

According to the USDA, 10% of Illinois corn had been harvested through Sept. 24 and 6% of soybeans were in the bins. That's slightly below the 2018-2022 averages of 13% for corn and 7% for soybeans. The majority of corn (73%) and beans (74%) was rated good or fair as of Sept. 24.

Additionally, the alfalfa hay harvest is reduced, but the government allowed livestock owners to hay conservation acres now and in preparation for winter, according to Turner.

by and look at the farm.'

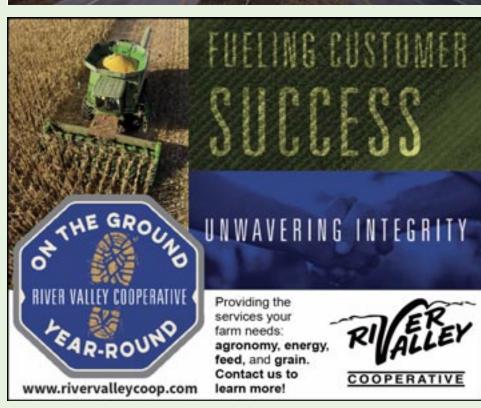

"In other cases, we've had young farmers be able to stay on the farm and grow their operation because landowners say they would like to go with a younger, ambitious farmer who wants to be able to stay on the farm."

As for "pushback" from farmers, Belser said it has been minimal.

"I can give you a long list of farmers who are thrilled," Belser said, noting that seven investors in the website make their money as farmers.

nuel "Chris" Welch, D-Hillside, has filed legislation that would, for the first time in Illinois, authorize legislative staff to form a union and engage in collective bargaining.

House Bill 4148, creating the Legislative Employee Labor Relations Act, comes in response to a monthslong effort by Democratic staff in the speaker's office to unionize.

Last year, a group of workers in the speaker's office formed the Illinois Legislative Staff Association, which has been seeking recognition as a union.

In Illinois, private-sector unions are governed by the National Labor Relations Board while public-sector unions are governed by the Illinois Labor Relations Board. But the law specifically excludes employees of the General Assembly from the definition of "public employee."

Michael LeRoy, a labor law expert at the University of Illinois, said earlier this month that the wording of that amendment

Clerks seek to halt election misinformation

By PETER HANCOCK

Capitol News Illinois

SPRINGFIELD – Six months before the next presidential primary elections in Illinois, county clerks and other local election authorities are asking for the public's help in stopping misinformation campaigns before they get started.

Officials from 25 counties scheduled a series of news conferences Tuesday in Tazewell, McLean and LaSalle counties. At the Tazewell event, the election officials said accusations of vote tampering and other misinformation campaigns have proliferated in each of the last two presidential election cycles, and they fear it could get worse in 2024.

Some of the election officials described misinformation they have encountered in recent elections, including accusations that voting machines had been rigged or that tabulation machines had been hacked, and Elizabeth Gannon, executive director of the Peoria County Election Commission, noted that all voting equipment used in Illinois is certified by both the U.S. Election Assistance Commission and the Illinois State Board of Elections.

"So we actually have social media monitors that we hire on Election Day, and even before, and they try to watch as many as possible – you can't watch them all – and see if something comes up so we can get ahead of them, whether it's Reddit or Facebook or whatever," McLean County Clerk Kathy Michael said.

FOOTBALL: Injuries cause Galva to go younger

Bowser took his back 50 yards with 51 second left in the third. He also had another interception early in the quarter.

Those two scores were enough to make meaningless West Hancock's lone score midway through the fourth quarter. But Noard said the Rebels will need a better showing today at Oneida against unbeaten ROWVA-Williamsfield (5-0, 4-0). And Price may not be able to play.

"They're more diverse and they've just done a real good job the last few years with that they do," Noard said. "It should be fun."

-Jeff Lampe West Central 54, Galva 6

GALVA - Things started decently for the hosts, who held Biggsville West Central to four downs and out on its first series. But ankle injuries to key players Cole Baulch and Caden Rachel stifled the momentum, according to Galva Coach Mark Jeffrey.

"We were feeling pretty good about things, but we were kind of behind the 8ball once that happened," he said

Sophomore Alex Davis and freshman AJ Traff helped fill the gaps Rachel and Baulch left. Alec Gustafson had a solid game, according to Jeffrey, including five punts for 167 total yards. But West Central (1-4) didn't allow Galva (0-5) to score until the third quarter.

older than us, bigger than us and they'll have more numbers than us," Jeffrey said. "There's no way to take the field with three or four freshmen starting in a varsity contest and compete with guys who are starting juniors and seniors."

Jeffrey's attempt to build a program takes to the road the next three weeks. That includes a game at 1 p.m. Saturday at Orangeville (2-3), located in Stephenson County just south of the Wisconsin border.

The Galva contingent plans to spend its idle Friday night in Oneida for the undefeated showdown between host ROWVA-Williamsfield and Stark County, according to Jeffrey. He said Baulch and Rachel's playing statuses are day-to-day.

-Nick Vlahos Princeville 36, United 20 PRINCEVILLE - After yielding 20 points in the first half, Princeville's defense took control in a victory that gives the Princes (3-2, 3-1) breathing room in the quest for five wins and a postseason berth. "At halftime we made a couple of adjustments and the defense really responded," Princeville Coach Jon Carruthers said.

Two big plays in the last few minutes of the game made the difference. The first came from Josh Hunt, who caught a 10-yard pass from Logan Carruthers and then broke four tackles en route to a 67-yard score.

"That was one of the more impressive runs I've seen," Coach Carruthers said. Following the touchdown, Coach Carruthers was ejected after arguing a latehit call. He will be unable to coach Princeville's next game at South Fulton. "I'm disappointed in myself for getting into that position," he said.

But the coach was doubly proud of his defense's response after United followed Hunt's long run by driving to the Princeville 20-yard line.

First Denzell Garza blew up a quarterback sweep for a loss. On the next play, Jake Williams intercepted a pass and sprinted 77 yards to score.

Williams had started his third game at QB and completed 10 of 15 passes for 153 yards before Logan Carruthers came in during the fourth quarter. It was his first action since suffering a shoulder injury in Princeville's second game.

ONEIDA - R-W maintained a perfect record heading into its showdown against Stark County. Both teams are 5-0 overall, 4-0 in the LincolnLand smallschool division.

The host Cougars made relatively short work of South Fulton (2-3, 2-2), which trailed 21-0 at intermission following two touchdowns from Spencer Brown. He ran 2 yards for a score after he caught a 7yard pass from Riley Danner for another.

Brown scored again in the third quarter, on a 37-yard

Rebels Pick 6 way to win

Two defensive TDs make up for lack of offense

By The Prairie News

WYOMING - Never underestimate the value of a veteran offensive lineman – or an opportunistic defense.

Struggling offensively last week to make up for the loss of three-year starter Tanner Price on its offensive line, the Stark County football team remained unbeaten thanks mostly to two defensive touchdowns.

Braden Lindley and Matthew Bowser each returned an interception for a touchdown in the third quarter last Friday as the Rebels defeated pass-happy West Hancock, 20-8.

Stark County (5-0, 4-0 LincolnLand small division) was outgained in the game 280-173 and had two turnovers, but for the second straight game leaned heavily on its defense.

"I've been real happy with how our defense has played," Stark County Coach Jade Noard said. "(The defense) has been real good at taking away what the other teams are good at."

The Rebels had three interceptions, recovered two fumbles and limited West Hancock (0-5) to 53 rushing yards on 27 attempts. And despite yielding 227 passing vards and 26 completions in 43 pass attempts, it was Stark County that made big plays in the passing game.

The first came in the first quarter, as Luke Rewerts found Connor Wagenbach for a 15-yard scoring pass. That was the only highlight for a Rebels offense that was out of synch without Price. The 6-foot, 300pound senior tackle suffered a non-contact injury to his quad muscle late in last Thursday's practice – leaving almost no time for adjustments.

"We had to shuffle some things and they brought a lot of pressure that caused us some trouble," Noard said.

From there, the Rebels defense took over. Lindley's pick-six was a 27-yarder with Continued on Page 19
